

GEORGE R.

GEORGE the second, by the grace of God, King of Great Britain, France, and Ireland, Defender of the faith, &c. to all to whom these presents shall come, greeting: Whereas Our trusty and well-beloved William Mount and Thomas Page, William Innys, Richard Ware, John and Paul Knapton, Aaron Ward, John Clarke in St. Paul's Church-Yard, Thomas Cox, Thomas Longman, Charles Hitch, Richard Hett, Andrew Millar, Joseph Pote, James Hodges, John Oswald, Edward Wicksteed, Jacob and Richard Tonson and Somerset Draper, Joseph Davidson, John and James Rivington, Mary Cooper, and the executors of the late Mr. John Darby; have by their petition humbly represented unto Us, that they have been at great expence and labour in preparing for the press, and printing a second edition, with many improvements, of a work entitled,

THESAURVS LINGVAE LATINAE COMPENDIARIVS: or, a compendious dictionary of the Latin tongue: designed for the use of the British nations: In three parts. Containing, I. The English appellative words and forms of expression before the Latin; in which will be found some thousand English words and phrases, several various senses of the same word, and a great number of proverbial expressions, more than in any former dictionary of this kind, all carefully endeavoured to be rendered in proper and classical Latin. To which are subjoined, 1. The proper names of the more remarkable places rendered into Latin. 2. The christian names of men and women. II. The Latin appellatives before the English; in which are given the more certain etymologies of the Latin words, their various senses in English ranged in their natural order, the principal idioms under each sense explained and accounted for, all supported by the best authorities of the Roman writers, with references to the particular book, chapter, or verse, where the citations may be found. III. The ancient Latin names of the more remarkable persons and places occurring in classic authors, with a short account of them both historical and mythological; and the more modern names of the same places, so far as they are known, collected from the most approved writers. To which are added, 1. The Roman calendar, much fuller than any yet published. 2. Their coins, weights, and measures. 3. A chronology of the Roman kings, consuls, and more remarkable events of that state. 4. The notes of abbreviation used in ancient Latin authors and inscriptions. 5. A short dictionary of the more common Latin words occurring in our ancient laws. By Robert Ainsworth. The second edition, with additions and improvements, by Samuel Patrick, LL. D. and usher of the Charter-House school.

Which work the petitioners, with the utmost submission, apprehend will be of great advantage to the publick; and being desirous of reaping the fruits of their expence and labour, and of enjoying the full profit and benefit that may arise from printing and vending the same, without any other person interfering in their just property, which they cannot prevent without Our royal licence and privilege: Wherefore the petitioners most humbly pray Us, to grant them Our royal licence and privilege for the sole printing, publishing, and vending the said work, in as ample manner and form as has been done in cases of the like nature; We being willing to give all due encouragement to this their undertaking, are graciously pleased to condescend to their request: And We do therefore by these presents, so far as may be agreeable to the statute in that behalf made and provided, grant unto them the said William Mount and Thomas Page, William Innys, Richard Ware, John and Paul Knapton, Aaron Ward, John Clarke in St. Paul's Church-Yard, Thomas Cox, Thomas Longman, Charles Hitch, Richard Hett, Andrew Millar, Joseph Pote, James Hodges, John Oswald, Edward Wicksteed, Jacob and Richard Tonson and Somerset Draper, Joseph Davidson, John and James Rivington, Mary Cooper, and the executors of the late Mr. John Darby, their executors, administrators and assigns, Our licence for the sole printing and publishing of the said work for the term of fourteen years, to be computed from the date hereof, strictly forbidding all Our subjects within Our kingdoms and dominions to reprint or abridge the same, either in the like, or in any size or manner whatsoever, or to import, buy, vend, utter, or distribute any copies thereof, reprinted beyond the seas, during the aforesaid term of fourteen years, without the consent or approbation of the said William Mount and Thomas Page, William Innys, Richard Ware, John and Paul Knapton, Aaron Ward, John Clarke in St. Paul's Church-Yard, Thomas Cox, Thomas Longman, Charles Hitch, Richard Hett, Andrew Millar, Joseph Pote, James Hodges, John Oswald, Edward Wicksteed, Jacob and Richard Tonson and Somerset Draper, Joseph Davidson, John and James Rivington, Mary Cooper, and the executors of the late Mr. John Darby, their executors, administrators and assigns, under their hands and seals first had and obtained, as they will answer the contrary at their peril: Whereof the commissioners and other officers of our customs, the master, wardens, and company of Stationers are to take notice, that due obedience may be rendered to Our pleasure herein declared.

Given at Our court at St. James's, the thirty-first day of January, 1745-6, in the nineteenth year of our reign.

By his Majesty's command,

HARRINGTON.

DICTIONARY
LATIN TONGUE:
Designed chiefly for the USE of the BRITISH NATIONS.
In TWO VOLUMES.

The FIRST contains TWO PARTS;

- I. THE English appellative words, and forms of expression, before the Latin: in which will be found some thousand English words and phrases, several various senses of the same word, and a great number of proverbial expressions, more than in any former DICTIONARY of this kind; all carefully endeavoured to be rendered into proper and classical Latin.

To which are subjoined,

1. The proper names of the more remarkable places rendered into Latin.
2. The christian names of men and women both in English and Latin.

- II. THE ancient Latin names of the more remarkable persons and places occurring in classic authors, with a short account of them both historical and mythological; and the more modern names of the same places, so far as they are known, collected from the most approved writers.

To which are added,

1. The Roman calendar, much fuller than any yet published.
2. Their coins, weights, and measures.
3. A chronology of the Roman kings, consuls, and more remarkable events of that state.
4. The notes of abbreviation used in ancient Latin authors and inscriptions.
5. A general chronology of eminent persons and memorable things.
6. A short dictionary of the more common Latin words occurring in our ancient laws.

The SECOND VOLUME contains the Latin appellatives before the English:

In which are given the more certain etymologies of the Latin words, their various senses in English ranged in their natural order, the principal idioms under each sense explained and accounted for; all supported by the best authorities of the Roman writers, with references to the particular book, chapter, or verse, where the citations may be found.

POSTQUAM hoc opus, ante quatuor abhinc lustra inceptum, haud sine magno quidem labore, multisque vigiliis, ad finem nuper perduxeram, quem potissimum patronum nuncuparem, ad cujus clientelam fidemque in illo edendo me reciperem, tum demum cogitare coepi. Splendidissimum certe ac gravissimum, qui et obscuritati meae lucem adferret, et opus ipsum aliorum approbationi commendaret, omnino necessarium esse plane videbam. Talem igitur mihi optanti, et cogitatione quaerenti, tu, vir clarissime, primus merito occurrebas. Tanta est enim tui nominis fama et auctoritas, tantaque tua in humaniores literas earumque cultores benevolentia; ut omnes fere ad te, tanquam ad commune aliquod perfugium, et unum hodie Maecenatem, cujus ope et favore adjuventur et protegantur, undique se conferant. Quot autem praeclarorum auctorum opera consiliis et hortationibus tuis in rei literariae commodum sint edita, norunt jam docti, nec posteritas ignorabit. Testis erit vicecomes nobilissimus, idemque philosophus acutissimus, Baconus; qui nuperam scriptorum suorum editionem benignis tuis auspiciis acceptam referet: testis vir eruditissimus, et dum vixit mihi amicissimus, Edmundus Chisbull; cujus praeclari et elaborati Asiaticarum inscriptionum corporis alterum volumen ipse in lucem emisit, alterum a tua in manes ejus pietate expectatur: testis etiam illustrissimus Jacobus Augustus Thuanus, recentioris aevi historicorum facile princeps; cujus egregia opera, splendore tanto scriptore digno exornata, haud ita pridem in publicam utilitatem prodierunt. Sed cur his aliisque id genus multis diutius immorer, quae jam vulgo celebrata omnium cognitioni sunt exposita?

IGNOSCES igitur, si et ipse quoque, tot tantisque tuis in bonas literas meritis incitatus, huic nostro Latinae Linguae Thesauro, quem eruditorum arbitriis in praefatione permiserim, non decus tantum et ornamentum, sed et quasi praejudicium quoddam, tuo hominis laudatissimi nomine praefixo, comparare vehementer exoptem. Cum sciam enim felices esse artes, quoties de iis judicent artifices; si tu mihi judicando adfueris, de eventu minime torquebor. Ne autem infra dignitatem tuam argumenti tenuitas videatur, neutiquam sane mihi timendum est. Ita enim studiis gravioribus, omnibusque philosophiae institutis, unde subsidii aliquid ad medendi scientiam comparari possit, penitus imbutus es; ut iis etiam artibus, quibus ad morum elegantiam dicendique facultatem via aperitur, mentem pariter habeas excultam, quarum amoenitatibus te haud raro oblectas. Hinc, ut nobilis ille Asclepiades, M. T. Ciceronis medicus et amicus, utroque uteris Apolline, et tam orando vales, quam medendo. Omnis autem eloquentiae fontem et originem verborum esse proprietatem, cujus accurata praecipio lexicorum proprium est munus, quivis harum rerum periti ultro fatentur. Quapropter nec principes nostri opera hujusmodi, sacro suo nomina dicata, sereno vultu accipere dedignati sunt.

ALIAS virtutes tuas eximias memorare hic non aggrediar, quae satis per se cognitae nullo praeconio, nedum nostro, indigeant. Quid, quod vota mihi fere praecepta esse videntur? Quid enim tibi tot ingenii et fortunae dotibus ornato voveam? Divitias? dedit, cumulateque dabit Hygia tua. Magnatum, regisque ipsius augustissimi gratiam et amorem? tenes: nullum enim certius amoris pignus, quam fides; nulla certior fides, quam vitae salutisque tutela. Gloriam, et immortalem nominis memoriam? id Musis erit curae, quas tam insignite demereris. Quidnam igitur restat, quod tibi ad hoc felicitatis culmen evecto comprecere; nisi ut Deus benignissimus te salvum et incolumem, quo diutissime ea fruaris, nobis conservare velit? voletque, si Britanniam nostram amet, bonorumque omnium votis annuere dignetur. Vale, vir praestantissime, et ad clientum tuorum numerum me adscribe. Dabam ipsis kalendis Martiis, anno Dom. MDCCXXXVI.

HUNC librum non tam in usum vestrum, quam puerorum in scholis discendum, paratum, ad manus vestras cito tamen perventurum, non erat unde dubitarem. Omnes enim patres et tutores, qui filiis et pupillis suis cupiunt, ipsique sint linguarum rudes, si sapiant, in huiusmodi libris comparandis vos in consilium adhibitueros satis scio, potius quam Sosios, quorum est nonnunquam librum malum ostentando vendere, bonumque elevando suppressere. Vestrae itaque existimationi, vestro certissimorum et aequissimorum iudicum arbitrio, standum mihi aut cadendum video; neque auctoritatem vestram defugio, si non tam quae feci, quam quae facere volui, simul in iudicium adhibueritis; illa enim mihi ipsi vix placent, haec animi mei conscientia effecit, ut nunquam sint displicitura. Sin autem eveniat, ut utrorumque pariter habita ratione, sententiis vestris cadam, multum certe dolebit; reliquum tamen erit, quo casum casusque dolorem consoler, nempe reipublicae literariae, cui uni studebam, interfuisse ut caderem. Causam igitur operis suscipiendi primum, deinceps suscepti exequendi consilium et rationem, paucis quam possim, exponam; quo fiet, ut quid susceperim, ad quid collineaverim, quatenus attigerim, vel a fine mihi praestituto aberraverim, unde certius procedat iudicium vestrum, appareat.

SED quinam ego sim, de quo iudicium ferendum est, si forte quaesitum fuerit, quanquam in iudiciis non quis, sed quid, rectius inquiritur, eloqui neutiquam pigebit; meque ludi olim privati, nunc multos annos emeritum, moderatorem fuisse sciatis. De aliis nescio, me quidem profecto non tam movet pervagatissimus ille versus, qui vetat artem pudere proloqui, quam fuistites, quam ordinis utilitas pariter ac dignitas; cum vitae in hoc dulci curriculo paene confectae jucundissima etiam nunc sit recordatio.

DE me satis: nunc quae me causa ad hunc molestissimum laborem moliendum impulerit, altius repetam. Sic igitur habete. Cum adolescens admodum scholam aperuissem, nondum usu edoctus quam viam ingredi, nedum insistere, oporteret, quaedam ex patria lingua in Latinam pueris identidem, quae ad grammaticae praecepta exercenda potissimum valere iudicavi, dedi traducenda. In his exercitationibus perlegendis non perinde saepe in grammatica, atque in verborum et locutionum delectu, peccatum inveni. In cuius rei causas propius intuenti comperitum est, aliam ductu meo, ut in hos errores incurrerent, accidisse, qui eis prius lexica utenda dedissem, quam ex auctorum lectione et observatione aliquem saltem verborum delectum habere possent: aliam autem lexicographis tribuendam, qui in ea praecipue parte, qua patria Latinis verbis praeponuntur, verborum et locutionum ambiguitates in utraque lingua occurrentes distinguendo atque explanando non sustulissent; aut voces rei significandae satis idoneas, alteram alteri linguae aptantes, non suppeditassent; aut aptis et accommodis pro dignitate, ac si omnes pari essent jure ac ordine, sedes suas non dedissent. Saepe etenim accidit, ut, ubi plura verba rem eandem denotantia pueris tradunt, ea, quae sunt medii seculi, prima in lexicis nostris teneant; purissima vero et lectissima quaeque in media, nonnunquam etiam in ima loca detrudantur. Hinc fit, ut, cum pueri nullam certam delectus faciendi, quem Caesar apud Ciceronem eloquentiae originem vocat, cynosuram habeant, mirandum non sit, si in scopulos, insolentia dico cum eodem Caesare verba, saepissime offendant. Sed ut tam ab errore meo, quam lexicographorum, pueris caverem, aliam aliquandiu viam institi, quam eo tempore nesciebam an quisquam alius; nempe ut lectiones breves ex probis auctoribus semel atque iterum, nonnunquam tertium quoque et quartum, discipulis meis praelectas, et quam potui claris et usitatis verbis explanatas, in linguam patriam vertendas praeciperem, versasque deinceps sine lexicorum vel auctoris ope (removi enim) in Romanam iterum vertendas, idque ipsissimis auctoris sepositi verbis atque ordine, quantum memoria complecterentur, traderem. Nec sane fuit, quare huius incepti me poeniteret. Hinc enim primum effeci, ut attentiores dictatis meis haberem, quo facilius pensum absolverent, et in utroque stilo indies proficerent, quid alter alteri distaret, et quatenus recederet, clarius perspicientes; tum ut a pravo verborum et locutionum usu illos abducerem, et ad utriusque linguae puritatem viam sternerem, et munirem; postremo, quod non leve habet momentum, ut assidua huiusmodi exercitatione memoriam acuerem et confirmarem.

Cum hanc autem instituendi rationem cum aliquot mei ordinis viris communicassem, probabant plerique, ita tamen ut domesticae doctrinae utiliore, quam publicae, iudicarent; in utraque vero pueris lexica praebenda omnes censebant. Haec tamen auctiora, dispositiora, et limatiora optabant; optabant quidem, sed qui manum suam auctui, dispositioni, et limaturae admoveret, repertus est nemo. Tandem cum nemini obtrudi potuit hic labor ingratus, nescio quo fato, siue rei autem, siue temporis, habeatur ratio, certe iniquissimo, in me recepi; non quo appositior me, noveram enim quam esset curta mihi supellex, quam alium quempiam mediocri saltem ingenio, ad pensum existimarem; sed quo viam huiusmodi operis feliciter ad summum perferendi certiore, in usum juventutis nostrae, cui ad inserviendum aetatem impenderam, monstrarem et praestruerem. Nulla etenim alia huc perveniri posse persuasissimum habebam; et quanquam vires meae essent infirmissimae, credebam tamen habere me portusculum, quo valentiores alios validioribus remis incumbentes, hoc cursu et certiore et breviori sibi monstrato, felicioribus auspiciis in Latium navigare hortarer et excitarem. Posse multa ad meliorem profectum in lexicis nostris addi, demi, mutari, pro diversa temporum ratione docent illa, quae ex linguarum et artium intermortuarum curatione ad tempora nostra scripta sunt; et quidem debere in illa potissimum parte, qua Latinis verbis patria praeponuntur, fluctuantis linguae nostrae ratio monet, postulat, flagitat, si vel nosmet alios, vel alios nos intelligere velimus. Quot enim verba, et nonnunquam in deterius, hoc, quo vivimus, seculo, partim aliqua, partim nulla necessitate cogente, mutata sunt? quot, posthabitis nostris, quae siue proprietatis, siue compendii, siue soni virilis magisque genti nostrae accommodi, habeatur ratio, ex levioribus gentibus civitate nostra donavimus? quot ejusdem generis, ut defueta et abolita, exclusimus; quot alia, quam proximo seculo, notione usurpamus? quot etiam locutiones defuetae, vel cum aliis mutatae sunt? Multa quoque in ea parte, qua Latinis verbis vernacula postponuntur, addi, demi, et mutari pariter debere tam veterum scriptorum libri lexicographorum temporibus nondum reperti, quam vocabula prius non audita ex MSS collatione in lucem prolata, ostendunt.

A literis postliminio redeuntibus lexica nostra, alia aliis pro temporum ratione copiosiora et emaculatoria prodierunt, inter quae praecipue meritissimo Littletoni opus, sed ab aliis auctum, per sexaginta plus minus annos in scholis tritum emicuit; non tamen tam usquequaque perfectum, ut nihil posterorum diligentiae sit relictum. Posse enim emendari, errores partim ex incuria nati; partim qui in opere longo ex taedio non possent non obrepere, et quos humana parum caveret natura ; partim denique in alterius linguae locutionibus alteri accommodandis, quod sane arduum est munus, et quod vel mediocriter obiisse, non veniam, sed laudem insuper meretur, plane demonstrant : posse etiam et locupletari in eadem parte, tum ex verbis plurimis, quae auctore adhuc superstiti usu trita erant, praetermissis ; tum ex eis, quae plurima ex illius tempore in fluctuantem linguam nostram recepta sunt, abunde manifestum est : potuisse et in secunda parte docuerunt doctissimi Cantabrigiae alumni, qui reverendi viri opus excoluerunt, praecipue in literis L, M, N, O, et P, adeo accurate, ut in illa, qua institerunt via, non multa magni momenti aliorum industriae reliquisse videantur. Expertus dico ; post plurimum enim studii operaeque impensum, quantum illic, prae reliquis literis, praestare possem, tandem inveni, praerepta nimirum et praecoccupata ab illis facultate. In hac itaque vindemiae parte pauca quaedam, quae ex fessinantium manibus exciderant, collegi ; et pauciora, quae ex pampinis racemariis magno labore meo decerpfi. Ideoque non vinitoris hic, nec vindemiatoris, sed racemantis nomen solum in me competit ; neque quicquam ultra depono, nisi, quod hanc quoque, ut caeteras partes, propriis suis corbibus disposuerim, aliquid saltem mihi deberi quis aequus agnoverit. Sane si tantum in caeteris literis, quantum in his, praestitum fuisset, hominis fastidiosi, vel nimium sibi tribuentis, eadem via quidquam conari, videri posset. Sed cum se res aliter haberet, essetque instituti mei alia moliri, aliamque a lexicis nostris in vocabulorum notionibus disponendis et ordinandis instare viam ; etsi in his opera mea minus posset, in reliquis tamen literis non inutilem fore confidebam.

Sed quae in hoc opere praestiterim, praestare certe volui, restat breviter ut exponam. In prima parte primum et praecipue adnitendum duxi, ut patriis nostris verba Latina lectissima et usitatissima responderent, antiqua et insolentia notarentur, et in delectu habendo sua auctori cuique servaretur dignitas ; ut omnes nimirum, qui ante M. Tullium scripserant, vel illo adhuc florente, vel defuncto, in oratione soluta scripserunt, illi posthaberentur ; idemque honos in stricta Virgilio et Horatio haberetur ; atque adeo aliis, pro suo cuique merito, sive oratoribus, sive poetis : deinde ut labentis Latinitatis auctores, qui proximo ab his seculo, adeo brevis in perfecto est mora, scripserunt, media tuerentur : lapsaeque in ima loca rejicerentur : denique ut verba Graeca purioribus saltem Latinis loco cederent, et asterisco, uti vocant, notarentur.

In secunda parte curae fuit, ut verbis Latinis eorumque significationibus sua itidem constaret auctoritas, non certa modo, sed et praecipua, reliquis ordine suo subjectis ; ut cuique notioni nota barbara praefixa notae suae reciprocae responderet ; ut quae sunt in purioribus auctoribus semel tantum, vel rarius usitata, notarentur, quo pueri ab his, cum usitatiora suppeditant, arcerentur ; ut vocabulis Graecis, quae in castissimis auctoribus Latinis nonnunquam reperiuntur, eodem vel simili sensu Latinum, si occurrat, subjiceretur ; atque, ut in summa dicam, ut quasi Latinitatis cribrum esset hic liber, propiusque ab indice auctorum purioris aevi abesset.

De tertia parte, qua ea fere continentur, quae communia habeo cum aliis lexicis, quicquam dicere supersedeo, cum statim ad oculum pateant.

Cum haec et alia plura majoris momenti in accommodandis significationum exemplis mihi exequenda proposuissem, libro huic Thesaurus nomen dedi, ad exemplum doctissimi viri Roberti Stephani, quem potissimum ducem, quoad licuit, in supellectili Latina sequi volui. Etenim cum ille universae Latinae linguae auctores, tunc temporis notos, cujuslibet significationis a se adductae, in eruditorum usum, quo magis eam confirmaret, advocaverit ; ego eundem finem, dummodo omnes verborum significationes, quas ille habeat, retinerentur, et aliae, quae ex aliis, praesertim vero ex B. Fabri utilissimo opere, addi possent, adferrentur, in juventutis nostrae gratiam, obtineri posse arbitratus sum. Quid enim tot opus est testibus, cum unus atque alter, quorum fides minime laborat, sint instar multorum ? Sane ad puram locutionis Romanae facultatem consequendam in sermone soluto pluris est M. Tullii, C. Caesaris, et T. Livii, et in stricto Virgilii, et Horatii, testimonium ; quam reliquorum paene omnium. In principum thesauris non tam κειμήλια πολλὰ, quam ἑσθλὰ spectari solent ; et in hoc ipso, de quo sermo est, ut elocutionis Romanae principis verba huc deflectam, non numerari, sed appendi, voces oportet. Quocirca, ut in omnium verborum significationibus exemplorum paucitas pretio pensaretur, non solum ut ex optimis quibusque auctoribus delectus illorum fieret, sed insuper ut singula virtute aliqua pollerent, hoc est, ut vocem ὁμώνυμον, aut συνώνυμον, aut utramque, quod saepe fit, continerent ; aut si haec non suppeditarent, ut consecutionem et conjunctionem verborum, vel φράσιν, quam Fabius elocutionem vocat, complecterentur ; aut si nihil esset horum, ut in illis, vel sub illis, proverbium aliquod, adagium, vel saltem aliqua sententia in moribus aut artibus utilis appareret, nullo labore meo absteritus, strenuissimam operam dedi. Sin autem prolixius esset exemplum, quam ut commode adduci ; aut magis involutum, quam ut satis apte contrahi posset ; aut nomen unius tantum significationis esset, animalis puta, plantae, herbae, et alia ; omissis verbis, auctoris librum, caput, ejusque divisionem, appositis notis barbaris, adjicienda curavi.

Haec omnia dum meditarer, aliaque, quae plura apud populares meos praefando exposui ; dumque, ut altera alteri linguae μετέδοξ, haecenus intentata concineret, intentus essem : adeo non est mirandum, si in errores nonnunquam inciderim ; ut magis esset mirum, si non incidissem. Monita autem, et observationes quaedam accuratae, viro eruditissimo et amicissimo, Joanni Wardo Greshamensi eloquentiae professori, quem in dubiis haud raro consului, accepta referri debent. Sed vos, judices, quo eruditiores et candidiores, eo in his ignoscentiores futuros spes bona animo meo insidet ; multa enim primo tentamini condonari solent, multa debent. Quae peccant alii, qui in laudandis auctorum suffragiis de loco silent, ea tutius peccant. Quem enim tam feriatum credere est, ut universa Ciceronis opera sit lecturus, quo certissime dicat illum hac vel illa verbi significatione, de qua in dubium venit, non usurpasse ? quod tamen ad convincendum necessarium foret. Laxus ille auctores citandi modus in usitatis verborum significationibus aliquo modo esset ferendus, in rarioribus non item. Qui enim in omnibus utitur, sibi credi quodammodo postulare videtur, quod a me longe absit. Existimationis enim meae in hac parte minimam rationem habendam decrevi, dum publicis commodis inservirem. Quamobrem errores, in quos incurrerim, celatos nolui ; quo enim essent manifestiores, eo sanabiliores esse judicavi ; cum in sermonis, quod in corporis, vitiis accidat, ut, quae nota sunt, faciliorem curationem admittant. Sed ne errores meos deprecando in graviores incidam, et in publica commoda peccem, tempus vestrum severioribus studiis occupatum morando, manum de tabula. Salvete, judices aequanimis, et, quodcunque de opere hoc meo vobis aequum videbitur, statuete. Dabam quarto kalendas Martias, anno Dom. MDCCXXXVI.

AS dictionaries in general, if compiled even with tolerable care and judgment, are of great service to learning, especially when digested in an exact alphabetical order, for the readily turning to whatsoever the consultor's occasion may require in that sort of literature, to which they are peculiarly adapted: so they are capable of continual improvements, either with regard to the corrections proper to be made on a careful revisal and mature consideration of what was done before; or to such additions, as on experience may be found necessary towards rendering them perfect. That this particularly hath been the case in respect of those purposely designed to promote the knowledge of the Latin and English tongues, will sufficiently appear by a short review of the several dictionaries of that kind published amongst us, which I shall now beg leave to lay before the reader.

PROMPTORIUM parvulorum sive clericorum, printed by Richard Pynson in the year MCCCCXCIX, in folio, is the first book of this sort I have ever met with. This consisteth only of one part, which exhibiteth the English words before the Latin, being destitute both of the Latin, and historical parts. But these defects were in part supplied by ORTUS vocabulorum, alphabetico ordine fere omnia, quae in Catholico, Brevisloquio, Cornucopia, Gemma vocabulorum, atque Medulla grammaticae ponuntur, cum vernaculae linguae Anglicanae expositione, continens, printed by Wynkyn de Worde in the year MDXVI, in quarto. This is compiled in two distinct alphabetical parts, in the former of which the Latin words are placed before their explications in English, in the latter the English words are put before the Latin. The declensions and genders of Latin Nouns, as well as the conjugations and preterperfect tenses of the Verbs, are set down very particularly both in the dictionary before mentioned, and in the English part of this work.

THE Vulgaria Roberti Whitintoni Lichfeldiensis, printed in MDXXV, Vulgaria Stanbrigii in MDXXIX, and Vocabula magistri Stanbrigii in MDXXXI, scarcely deserve to be mentioned in this place, being rather a sort of vocabularies than dictionaries of the Latin and English tongues.

THOMAS ELYOT also obliged our countrymen with the publication of a Latin and English dictionary, printed at London in the year MDXLII, in folio, with the title of Bibliotheca Eliotae, which seemeth to be much more copious than any of the former. This author was born of a knightly family in Suffolk, received part of his education at Oxford, then travelled beyond the seas, and on his return was introduced to court. King Henry VIII finding him to be a person of good parts, conferred the honour of knighthood upon him, and imployed him in certain embassies beyond the seas, particularly to Rome about the divorce of 'Queen Katherine, and afterwards to the emperor Charles V, during which last his great friend and chorny Sir Thomas More was beheaded. He died in March MDXLVI, and was buried at Carleton in the county of Cambridge. But the editors of the late edition of Stephens's Latin Thesaurus, for what reason I know not, say, that Elyot was primus qui has literas inter nos professus est. Praef. fol. 20.

THOMAS COOPER, being sensible of several defects in the dictionary published by Sir Thomas Elyot, took no small pains in improving it; for, besides his giving a much fuller account of the different senses of the Latin words, he added 33000 words and phrases; the materials, for the most part, being taken from Roberti Stephani Thesaurus, and Johannes Frisius's Latin and German dictionary, saith Antony Wood in the second edition of his Albenae Oxonienses in MDCCXXI. This work passed through several editions; the first was at London in MDLII, which still retained the name of Elyot; but it was afterwards reprinted with large improvements in MDLXV, with the title of Thesaurus linguae Romanae et Britannicae, &c. and again in MDLXXVIII, as also in MDLXXXIV, which last is esteemed the best. It may not be amiss to observe, that both Elyot's and Cooper's dictionaries want the English part, proper to assist younger scholars in translating English into Latin, though they have the historical and poetical part. This reverend author was born at Oxford, and afterwards elected into a fellowship of Magdalene college there. Queen Elizabeth had so great an esteem for him on account of the service he had done to learning by the publication of this useful work, that she promoted him to the deanery of Gloucester in MDLXIX, to the bishoprick of Lincoln in MDLXX, and to that of Winchester in MDLXXXIV, where he ended his days 29 April MDXCIV.

BARRET's Alvearie, or quadruple dictionary in English, Latin, Greek, and French, was printed at London in the year MDLXXX, in folio. The author of this work having been imployed several years in the instruction of youth, and observing the Latin dictionaries of his times to be very defective in giving proper assistance to younger students, chiefly for translating English into Latin, made a large collection both of words and phrases out of the classic authors to supply their defects in this particular, with a design to publish them to the world; but being prevented by death, this work was afterwards published by a friend of the author. As this hath gone through but one impression, so far as I can find, I need say no more of it, than that it seemeth to be a valuable performance for those times.

THOMAS THOMASIIUS, who was for some years printer to the university of Cambridge, and died 9 Aug. MDLXXXV, published also a Latin and English dictionary, in quarto; which met with so favourable a reception, that it underwent five impressions in the space of eight years, and bore in all fourteen impressions, say the editors of the last edition of Stephens's Thesaurus. I have not been able to procure a sight of the first edition of Thomasius, and therefore can neither determine the precise time of its first appearance in the world, nor ascertain the number of its parts, when first published; but that some distinct parts were added to the following editions, will evidently appear by a recital of part of the title to the tenth edition thereof in MDCXV, printed by Legat, who succeeded him as printer to the said university: Huic etiam (praeter dictionary historicum et poeticum, ad prophanas historias poetarumque fabulas intelligendas valde necessarium) novissime accessit utilissimus de ponderum, mensurarum, et monetarum veterum reductione ad ea, quae sunt Anglis jam in usu, tractatus. Decima editio superioribus cum Graecarum dictionary, tam earundem primitivorum adjectione, multo auctior. Cui demum adjectum est supplementum, auctore Ph. Hollando, med. doctore, nova aliquot dictionary millia completens; una cum novo Anglo Latino dictionary. Hence we may observe, that how imperfect soever the former editions of this book were, yet this consisted of the three chief parts, into which most of the Latin and English dictionaries published since that time have been divided.

PHILEMON HOLLAND, who made the said supplement to Thomasius's dictionary, was born at Chelmsford towards the latter end of the reign of king Edward VI, educated in Trinity college Cambridge, was afterwards, for about twenty years, master of the free school at Coventry, after that practised physic in the same county, and departed this life 9 Febr. MDCXXXVI. This supplement is printed distinctly from the other parts of that book, and called Paralipomena, as containing such Latin words as the doctor had gleaned from classic, and other Latin authors, and were omitted by Thomasius.

JOHN RIDER, born at Carrington in Cheshire, educated in Jesus college Oxford, for some time minister of S. Magdalene Bermondsey in Southwark, then rector of Winwick in Lancashire, and promoted to the bishoprick of Kil-laloe in Ireland in the Year MDCXII, where he continued to his death, which was in MDCXXXII, published a dictionary, English and Latin, and Latin and English, at Oxford in MDLXXXIX, in a large thick quarto. This, saith A. Wood, was the first dictionary that had the English before the Latin, epitomizing the learnedest and choicest dictionaries that were then extant, and was beheld as the best that was then in use; but that part of it, which had the Latin before the English, was swallowed up by the greater attempts of Francis Holyoake. But that Mr. Wood was mistaken in this case, if he meaneth, that Rider's dictionary was the first which consisted of an English and Latin part, as well as of the Latin and English, plainly appeareth by what is said before in my account of the Promptorium, as well as of the Ortus vocabulorum; though, so far as I can find, Rider's was the first Latin dictionary, in which the English part was placed at the beginning of the book, before the Latin part.

FRANCIS HOLYOAKE, who was born at Nether Whitacre in Warwickshire, educated in Queen's college at Oxford, afterwards kept a school in his own country, and was made rector of Southam there in MDCIV, took considerable pains in revising, correcting, and augmenting what Rider had published, especially with regard to the etymological part; this was first printed at London in MDCVI, in quarto, and was afterwards reprinted several times with enlargements. He died 12 Nov. MDCXXXII.

THOMAS HOLYOAKE, his son, who was born at Stony Thorp, near Southam before mentioned, educated in Queen's college Oxford, was rector of Whitnash in Warwickshire, and prebendary of the collegiate church of Wolverhampton in Staffordshire, made very large additions to the dictionary published by his father, with a design to print them in a new edition; but dying 10 June MDCLXXV, the same was published by his son Charles, of the Inner Temple, London, in a large and well printed folio, in MDCLXXVII.

NICOLAS GREY likewise made some additions to Rider, which were several times printed at London, saith A. Wood; but the same author owneth himself at a loss as to the time of its first publication, and addeth, that a second or third edition of Holyoake's coming out, prevented, as it is said, the further publication of it. This gentleman was born in London, elected student of Christ Church Oxford, from Westminster school, in the year MDCVI, and was afterwards the first master of the Charterhouse school in London; but, after some years, marrying, against the statutes of that house, the governours thereof discharged him from that imployment, by presenting him to the benefice of Castle Camps in Cambridgeshire. In January MDCXXIV he was admitted chief master of Merchant Taylors school in London, and in MDCXXXI chief master of Eton, out of which he was expelled in the time of the civil wars; but being restored on the return of king Charles II, he died at Eton towards the close of the year MDCLX, and was buried in the chapel there.

CHRISTOPHER WASE, fellow of King's college in Cambridge, and afterwards superior beadle of law in Oxford, published likewise a Latin dictionary, the second edition of which was printed in MDCLXXV. This is a compendium of Calepine, but done with so much judgment, saith Dr. Littleton in his Latin preface to his dictionary, that one can hardly find any thing in it which savoureth of barbarism. However, it seemeth to be rather designed for the use of those who have made some proficiency in the Latin tongue, than for such as are only beginning to learn that language.

FRANCIS GOULDMAN, who was educated in Christ's college in Cambridge, was for some time rector of South Okendon in Essex, and died in MDCLXXXIX, published also a Latin dictionary in quarto, in the year MDCLXIV, which was afterwards reprinted several times, and the Cambridge edition in MDCLXXIV much enlarged by William Robertson. But Gouldman's design, according to the account of Dr. Littleton, his successor in this sort of learning, was rather to make new additions, than to correct the former mistakes, or to throw out the many barbarous Latin words which had crept into the dictionaries then extant. For this reason

DR. ADAM LITTLETON undertook to reform it; whose greatest aim, as he tells the English reader in his preface, was to carry the purity of the Latin tongue throughout, and not to take things or words upon trust, so as to transcribe others mistakes. This was first published in quarto at London in MDCLXXVIII, and hath met with such a general approbation, that the sixth edition thereof was published but a few months ago. He was a minister's son, of an ancient and genteel family at Westcot in Worcestershire, elected student of Christ Church in Oxford in MDCXLVII, was some time an usher in Westminster school, and in MDCLVIII became second master of the same. After the restoration he was chaplain to king Charles II, rector of Chelsea, and subdean of Westminster. He died in the beginning of July, MDCXCIV, and was buried in Chelsea church.

THE Cambridge dictionary in quarto, printed in MDCXCIII, with the title of Linguae Romanae dictionary luculentum novum, is an improvement of Littleton, made by several persons, whose names have been concealed from public knowledge. What plan the editors of this have proceeded upon may be learnt by their own preface; in which, after a grateful acknowledgment of the great assistance they had by the extraordinary pains of the reverend and learned Dr. Littleton, as to the English Latin part, they principally set forth, that they have inserted several whole classes of words, which had been either omitted before, or were very lately introduced into our language; and that they have been more exact, more distinct and full, in noting the various significations of Verbs and Nouns: that in the Latin-classic they began their collection by a careful perusal of several authors, as Lucretius, Terence, Caesar, Phaedrus, Gratius, Petronius, &c. some of whom they observed had scarce been named, or if sometimes quoted, often to very little, and sometimes to very bad purposes, in dictionaries of the same volume with theirs; that the second edition of Robert Stephens's Latin Thesaurus lay always before them, and was constantly consulted by them; that they likewise used a manuscript collection in three large folio's, digested into an alphabetical order, made by Mr. John Milton out of all the best and purest Roman authors; and further, that the complete indices generally annexed to the Dauphin editions of most of the Roman writers had been very serviceable to them; that they had retrenched many far fetched etymons in former dictionaries, had given a larger account of the construction of Verbs, had rejected all words and phrases, whose authors were either not to be found, or, when found, appeared in so barbarous and uncouth a dress, as made them very unfit company for Tully, Caesar, &c. And finally had distinguished the poetical Latin words by a flower [✿] placed before them. Thus far they. Those who are desirous to have a more particular account of the difference between this dictionary and that published by Dr. Littleton, as to the English and Latin part, may satisfy their curiosity by the comparison of a few sheets of each; but it is very manifest, that these editors have made very large and useful improvements in the letters L, M, N, O, and P, in the Latin classical part, and augmented or corrected what had been done by Littleton (though neither in so large nor careful a manner as under the aforesaid letters) in most of the other parts of the work. The improvements made under the aforesaid letters, as also a large part of their title, as well as the preface, have been inserted in the several editions of Littleton (except the last, which hath a new preface, and hath been otherwise somewhat altered) printed since the publication of this work at Cambridge; but the other parts of Littleton in general remain as they were, when first published.

ELISHA COLES published also a Latin and English dictionary in the year MDCLXXVII, designed chiefly for the use of scholars of a lower class. He hath indeed considerably enlarged the English Latin part, which containeth many more English words and phrases than any Latin dictionary published before his time. But not a few of those words are now intirely obsolete, many of them interpreted in a wrong sense, and worse translated into Latin. And the Latin English part is very defective both with regard to the several senses of the Latin words, and the citation of the Roman writers proper to fix their authority. This work however, being not half the price of Dr. Littleton's, hath gone through twelve impressions, the first whereof was printed in a small quarto, and all the following in octavo. The author of this work was born in Northamptonshire, entered into Magdalene college in Oxford in the year MDCLVIII, taught the languages to foreigners in the parish of Covent Garden in London, and was afterwards for some time an usher in Merchant Taylors school; after which, on some default being obliged to quit that employment, he went into Ireland, where he continued till his death; but of the precise time thereof I have not been able to get any certain information.

HAVING exhibited this short history of our English and Latin dictionaries, I shall now proceed to give the public a faithful account of the motive which chiefly induced me to undertake this tedious work, and of the several steps I have taken in the prosecution of it.

THE motive which principally engaged me in this undertaking, and supported me under the fatigue of consulting the many books necessary for carrying it on, was an earnest desire of contributing all that lay in my power to the preservation of the purity of the Latin tongue in our grammar schools. For having observed, in the course of years I was employed in the instruction of youth, very many mistakes, with regard to this particular, in all the Latin dictionaries which fell into my hands, as well as their numerous defects and omissions of English words and expressions; and that these writers have generally been more studious of making additions to what had been printed before, than of reforming the errors, and rejecting the many barbarous Latin words, thus introduced into dictionaries, as well as regardless of a matter of great importance in this affair, namely, the making the English and Latin parts to tally with each other: I thought it would be a proper employment for me to bestow some pains in attempting to give better assistance to the British youth, while conversant in these studies, than hath as yet appeared in public. This design, I think, could never be perfectly accomplished by the plan our dictionaries have all proceeded on, either in citing no Roman authors as vouchers to the truth of what they deliver, or of citing them only in so general and loose a manner, as hardly ever to refer to the particular book, chapter, or verse, by which the more curious and accurate persons may be able to judge of the truth or falsity of the senses by them given to Latin words, or of their authority amongst the classic writers. For this, and other reasons, I have proceeded in a method differing in several respects from all the Latin and English dictionaries, which have hitherto been published amongst us.

BUT as the following work consisteth principally of THREE distinct parts, with some smaller appendages annexed to two of them, I shall now give an account of each part separately, in the same order as they are placed in the book.

I. THE first part representeth the English words and phrases before the Latin, being designed to assist learners in translating whatsoever may be written or spoken in our tongue into proper Latin. To answer this end, "It ought to contain all words and forms of speech commonly used in English, with such Latin words and expressions annexed to them, as may fairly be supported by the authority of the Roman writers, commonly called classics; and such as denote, as near as the nature of the two languages, and the different customs of both people, will admit, the same ideas and conceptions of the things designed to be conveyed by them." For mistakes in any of these cases must be attended with ill consequences to the learner, who is not able to judge for himself.

ABOUT forty years are elapsed, since any person hath published a new Latin and English dictionary amongst us, or attempted any thing considerable for adjusting the said two languages the one to the other; in which interval our mother tongue hath been much altered, or refined, and will indeed be always fluctuating, whilst the liberty is indulged, either of introducing into it new words and forms of expression from our neighbouring countries, or of coining new ones amongst our selves. It must therefore be thought necessary that our Latin dictionaries, which are chiefly designed for the instruction of youth, should keep pace with those alterations or refinements; for otherwise the persons who stand most in need of this sort of books, either by reason of the tenderness of their years, or their necessary application to studies of a different nature, will be deprived of a great part of that advantage they may justly hope to receive from them.

IN order to supply the defects of the former Latin dictionaries in this respect, whether occasioned by the variations made in the English tongue, or by the oversight of the compilers of those books, I have endeavoured to collect, in the following work, all the single words I could meet with now commonly used as English words. Some of these could not be known to the compilers of those dictionaries, as being very lately brought into use amongst us; such as, alert, dupe, furlough, stockjobber, shamade, &c. But it must be acknowledged, that many others of common use, even at the times when those authors wrote, have been by them entirely omitted; such as,

acceptation,	aleconner,	apologise,	armorial,	assimilated,	attended,
acclivity,	alleviate,	application, signify-	around,	atheistical,	attenuated, accomplice,	alleviated,	ing diligence,	arrangement,	atrocious,	audaciousness, accuracy,	alleviation,	apportioned,	artless,	attainable,	avowedly, acquiescency,	amazing, signifying	to appraise,	assant,	attainment, in the	awfully,
actuate,	wonderful,	an appraiser,	assemblage,	sense of	awfulness,
an advertising,	amazingly,	an appraisement,	assiduous,	a man of good at-	awkwardness;
afflitive,	amplitude,	aqueous,	assiduously,	tainments,
alcorve,	amply,	argumentative,	assignable, with many others under the single letter A. From hence the publick may form a tolerable judgment of the improvements made in this respect under all the remaining letters, in each of which I have taken equal care to insert in the following work all such single English words of common use, as I could meet with on a diligent search made for that very purpose.

UNDER this head may be also comprehended many technical terms in philosophy, botany, physics, painting, mathematics, heraldry, and several other arts and sciences; such as air-pump, barometer, apetalous, chicken-pox, attitude, contraste, secant, tangent, theodolite, and torteauxes; all which may be undoubtedly serviceable to some persons, and yet, so far as I can possibly find, now make their first appearance in an English and Latin dictionary.

BESIDES these there are several other terms, which, though of an inferior class, yet, being of common use, ought to have been inserted; as,

advance guard,	cherry brandy,	the kerb stone of a well,	a scrape , or trouble-	a tally man ,
advance money,	dispensing power,	to make a lodgement in	some business,	a tiff , or small quantity
after reckoning,	entertaining discourse,	a siege ,	a sham plot ,	of liquor,
after clap,	foul copy,	misprint ,	a standing dish ,	a toasted beauty , statute of bankruptcy ,	gill ale ,	organ builder ,	standing forces ,	the running title to a
benefit of clergy ,	perspective glass ,	pounce ,	spunging house ,	book,
bludgeon ,	house double and single ,	quarter sessions ,	a seat , or scene of ac-	a wafer for sealing let-
boarding school ,	house warming ,	a good or ill run in	tion,	ters,
buckler of beef ,	a man of good inven-	gaming,	to publish a book by	whiting ;
chance customer ,	tion,	a run in traffic,	subscription ,

with very many more, too tedious to be here repeated.

BUT a compleater collection of single English words or terms, commonly used in any art or profession, is not the chief thing wanting in this part of our English and Latin dictionaries; they are much more defective in certain forms of English speech usually called phrases. These, as they are much more difficult to be translated into another language, than single words or terms generally are; so they ought with greater care to be inserted in all performances of this nature. As therefore the single words and terms fell under consideration in the course of the alphabet, care hath been taken to insert the most common forms of speaking or writing in English appertaining to each; which method may be of singular advantage to those who have occasion to consult this book, in directing them readily to translate into good Latin several others of a near affinity to these herein mentioned, which they may some time or other have occasion for, but were too numerous to be all inserted; as under

ACCOUNT,	under AFFECTION,	to give an authority to a thing, to adjust, balance, make even, or settle	to bridle the affections,	to put in authority;
accounts,	to gain, or win the affections of a person,	under BAIL,
to learn to cast accounts,	to lose the affections of a person,	to accept, or admit to bail,
to cast up his accounts, in order to know	to move the affections by speaking;	to demand bail,
the state of them,	under AFFRONT,	to except against bail,
to cast up his accounts, or vomit,	to receive an affront,	to give, or put in bail,
to call one to an account on suspicion of	to put up an affront;	to save himself and his bail;
some ill practice,	under APPLAUSE,	under BARGAIN,
to call one to an account concerning ex-	to gain applause,	to buy a bargain,
penses,	to seek applause;	to sell a good bargain,
to give an account of what a person	under APPRENTICE,	to stand to one's bargain;
hath done in any affair,	to bind, or put apprentice,	under BATTLE, to give an account of an affair, or re-	to serve an apprenticeship;	to give an enemy battle, hearse the manner in which it was	to be out of his apprenticeship;	to provoke to battle, transacted,	under AUTHORITY,	to gain a battle,
To pass an account,	to be in authority,	to lose a battle,
to place to account,	to cite, or quote authorities,	to run the hazard of a general battle,
to state an account,	to do a thing of one's own authority,	to present themselves in order of battle;
to take an account of;	to excel in authority, and so of a great number of others.	And this is done not only in Nouns,	but Verbs also; as,
under BEAR,	to bear an impression,	to bear such a sense;
to bear an office,	to bear a grudge,	under BEAT,
to bear arms as a soldier,	to bear in mind,	to beat out of countenance,
to bear arms, or a coat of arms,	to bear the loss of a thing,	to beat up the enemy's quarters, to bear the charge of,	to bear great affection to one,	to beat, as the pulse,
to bear one company,	to bear a proportion to,	to beat in upon, as rain,
to bear date,	to bear a resemblance, or likeness to,	the clock beateth well, &c.
to bear hard upon,	to bear rule, or sway,

The number of these phrases, and the different applications of the same words to express various meanings, under some heads is very considerable; as, for instance, in the word

HAND,	to let drop out of one's hands,	to get the upper hand of one,
to hand a thing from one to another,	to fall into one's hands,	to give one the upper hand,
to hand a thing down to posterity,	to fall in hand with a thing,	to go from the business in hand, to bring one up to one's hand,	to be in hand with a business,	to guide the hand of one learning to write, to bring one's hand in for working,	to be under the doctor's hand,	to lay hands on one,
to buy a thing at the best hand,	to bring up a child by hand,	to lay a thing out of one's hands,
to come cap in hand to one,	to get a thing into one's hands,	to pay money in hand.
to drop out of one's hands,

And under RUN above three score expressions, very common in our tongue, may be found in this work, of which no notice hath been taken in any other English and Latin dictionary.

THESE being generally rendered into Latin by such phrases as occur in the Latin classical part, learners will not only be more easily furnished with variety of Latin phrases corresponding to the English ones, than they could be by the help of common phraseological books; but the two parts of English Latin, and Latin classical, are by this method made more conformable to each other, and the true sense of the Latin phrases will be more easily imprinted on the mind, which by frequent use will become familiar, and be an ornament to the Latin compositions or translations of our British youth.

As many both of the single words and forms of expression are used in different senses, and to denote various ideas; so, unless these senses be accurately distinguished, and explained in a manner suitable to younger capacities, they will be apt to choose such Latin words in translating their school exercises, as are no ways adequate to express the meaning of the English; and must inevitably be guilty of many mistakes, which might be prevented, were they furnished with proper assistance by their dictionaries, in a clear explication of the different meanings of the the words and expressions they may have occasion to translate. I have therefore not only retained all such distinctions as appeared to me to be already done with judgement by others, but have added also several new ones under all words capable of such variations. These explications of the different senses are included between crotchets, marked thus []; and this generally is done in an alphabetical order with respect to the first word in the explication, that the consultor's eye may be more readily directed to the sense he wanteth. Almost every page containeth several instances of these different senses of the same English word, but the curious will be better able to form a judgement concerning the improvements of this kind, by comparing the words following with the accounts given of them in other dictionaries;

address,	clear,	disgrace,	fine,	lofty,	point,	singular,	succour,
allow,	close,	dispatch,	grateful,	matter,	prejudice,	spirit,	sway,
bubble,	course,	dispose,	heavy,	move,	reason,	spring,	thought,
careful,	credit,	extravagant,	idle,	orderly,	reckon,	storm,	thoughtful,
charge,	curiosity,	fair,	light,	painful,	sense,	study,	thoughtfulness.

MOREOVER, explications in crotchets are subjoined to all English words, in which I apprehended there could be any difficulty to young learners; as also to all the technical terms, and antiquated expressions, which it was thought proper to insert in this part.

A MUCH greater number of English proverbs, which likewise may be of some use, are inserted here, than can be found in any other book of this sort now extant.

As also, in compliance with custom, the active and neutral senses of English Verbs are more fully and clearly explained.

IN so large a collection of English words and expressions, some, no doubt, will occur, which are not of the politest sort, and therefore exceptions may be taken at their being inserted in a book designed for the assistance of young gentlemen in their studies of polite literature. But if the real design of an English and Latin dictionary be duly considered, according to the rule before proposed, namely, to teach persons how to translate into classic Latin all words and forms of speech commonly used in English, and not to fix the goodness or badness of the English; as also, that the difficulty of translating the more vulgar expressions is much greater, than of those used in politer discourse; I persuade myself the persons who make such objections, will see sufficient reasons to justify the insertion of them.

WHAT hath been already said, may, as I conceive, be sufficient to convince the reader of the numerous deficiencies in all our English and Latin dictionaries now extant, with respect to their collections of English words and forms of expression, and of their great omissions in accurately distinguishing the different senses of the same word or phrase; to say nothing of the many useless and utterly antiquated terms they are swelled with in this part of their works, nor of the wrong turns they have given to many words, which now at least bear a quite different meaning. I shall therefore proceed to consider

2. How far our English and Latin dictionaries have answered the true design of such books, with regard to the Latin words and phrases annexed to the English ones; which, according to the rule before laid down, ought to be such, "as may fairly be supported by the authority of the Roman writers, and such as denote, as near as the nature of the two languages, and the different customs of both people, will admit, the same ideas and conceptions of the things designed to be conveyed by them."

A CRITICAL review of a few pages of the best of our Latin and English dictionaries, that printed at Cambridge, may be of service to give the reader a true representation of this matter. The editors of this book have these words in their title. Among which latter (the Latin annexed to the English in the first part of their edition) no word or expression is admitted, but what is classic, and of an approved authority; and in their preface assure the reader, that they had not only read, but weighed and considered every line and word in that whole collection. This is so strong an assurance of accuracy, that one would be unwilling to suspect the truth of the assertion; but had I, upon a careful examination, found it to be strictly true, I should hardly have given myself the trouble of compiling a new Latin dictionary, or of desiring the public to peruse without prejudice, the following remarks on little more than the first two pages of the English and Latin part of the dictionary published by them.

To abash, or make ashamed, Pudescere, confundere, rubore suffundere.] The first of these Latin words cannot fairly be supported by the authority of the classic writers, even in their own opinion, may be concluded from their entirely omitting it in the Latin classical part. The second Latin word, confundere, is indeed interpreted in this sense in the Latin classical part of that work, but whether, taken absolutely, it can be supported by the authority of the classics, may very much be questioned, as the reader may see more fully in my account of it in the Latin classical part of this work. It had therefore been more adviseable, for fear of tincturing younger minds with false ideas, to have omitted it here, and have put only what I have done, Ruborem alicui incutere, rubore aliquem suffundere.

To abate one's courage, Reprimere animum, percellere, tondere cristas.] That animum frangere, or percellere are used in this sense by the purest Roman writers, I believe can admit of no doubt. But I do not remember ever to have met with tondere cristas in any classic writer.

Abatement of a writ [Abatamentum] exceptio dilatoria, actionis abolitio.] This being a term peculiar to the law, may be well enough rendered into the Latin adapted to that profession, and therefore I take no notice of the barbarism in abatamentum, a word frequently met with in our common law books, nor of exceptio dilatoria, which though not classical, is commonly used to express this meaning by the civilians; but I cannot forbear to observe, that actionis abolitio must have been first inserted without due care; for how can actionis abolitio answer the idea of abatamentum, which is rightly explained in their law Latin part to be, when, upon some default, the plaintiff's suit ceaseth for a time?

An abatement, or intruding, Intrusio.] This Latin word is not in their classical part, neither intrusor, which is annexed as proper Latin for the next following English word. If it be said, by way of excuse, that these are law terms; I ask, why the † prefixed to several law terms in this very page of their book, and to an abatement in heraldry, though that be an established term among the professors of that science, is not prefixed to this?

An abbess, Abbatisa.] This word in their classical part is marked as bad Latin; why is it not distinguished by the same mark in this place?

To abbreviate, or shorten, Abbreviare, contrahere, in compendium redigere.] The first of these Latin words must be acknowledged to be bad, and yet is neither here, nor in their classical part, marked as such; and abbreviatus, which followeth in the next article, is not inserted at all in their classical part, neither is abbreviatio; and abbreviatura is unquestionably bad, and yet all inserted here as good Latin words.

To abridge, or lessen one's charges, Contrahere sumptus.] It should be minuire sumptus; the former denoting rather to put one's self to charges.

To abridge, or keep one short of his liberty, Coercere, in ordinem redigere.] Instead of the latter, which signifieth to reduce into rank, or order, should have been inserted fraenare, refracnare, cobibere, inhibere, reprimere, comprimere, or compescere.

An abce, or A, B, C, or cross row, Alphabetum, tabula abcedaria] and An A, B, C scholar, Abecedarius.] Are all words utterly unknown to the classic writers.

An abhorrer of marriage, Misogamus. An abhorrer of women, Misogynus.] Both Greek words, and neither of them thought worthy of a place in their Latin classical part. Whereas osor mulierum is used by Plautus for the latter, and why may not osor nuptiarum be judged proper to express the former?

Ablepsy, or blindness, Caecitas.] The English word, being derived from the Greek, and that Greek word used by Suetonius a Latin author, ablepsia ought not to have been entirely omitted either here, or in their Latin classical part.

To abolish, or utterly destroy, Abolere, disperdere.] The last word disperdere, according to their own account of the sense of it in their classical part, is to lose, consume, throw, or squander away, not utterly to destroy. It should have been abolere, perdere, extinguere.

An abolishment, Exauctoratio, &c.] This word is justly left out in their classical part; and, were it good, must signify, according to their own interpretation of exauctoratio, a discharging or cashiring.

Full of abomination, Abominosus.] This word is marked in their classical part as bad; how then can it be good here? especially when abominandus, which is undoubtedly classical, could not, one would think, but readily occur to the mind of this author.

To absent another, or cause him to be absent, Absentare.] Here both English and Latin are equally faulty, there being no such expressions, I think, in either language.

Absterive, of a cleansing nature, Abstersivus.] This word is so far from being classical, that it is utterly omitted in their Latin part. But abstergendi vim habens, or abstergendi vi praeditus, is good Latin, and very well expresseth the meaning of the English word.

To abstract, or abridge, Abstrahere, &c.] Abstrahere, in their classical part, is rightly interpreted to withdraw, pull away, &c. but hath no such sense given it there as contract or abridge, neither indeed is this sense of it to be supported by the classic writers.

An abstract, or short draught of a thing, Compendium, abstractum.] The last word is acknowledged by themselves to be bad in their classical part, as it certainly is; moreover, breviarium, summarium, * epitome, the words used by classic writers to denote this sense, are intirely omitted.

Absurd——incongruus.] A word not used by the classic writers.

Absurdity, Absurditas.] This word is inserted both in this place, and in the Latin classical part as of good authority, but was unknown to accurate writers in the Latin tongue, whose works are now extant.

Abundantly——affluenter.] This word, both here and in their classical part, is put as a good Latin word, probably, because affluens and affluentia being undoubtedly such, the compilers took for granted that affluenter must be so too.

Too much abundance, Superabundantia.] This word, in the compilers own opinion, is bad, being attributed in their classical part to Augustine; but might have been easily amended by nimia abundantia.

Abusive——abusivus.] This word is marked in the Cambridge edition as bad, but is not so marked in the editions of Littleton; and maledicus, a word used by the purest Roman writers, and well expressing the notion of the English word, is omitted in both.

By this short review it appeareth how little credit is to be given sometimes to title pages or prefaces; and I cannot forbear observing, that I was not a little surprized to find that not one of these errors is corrected in the edition of Dr. Littleton's dictionary lately published.

WERE such mistakes as these to be met with only in the beginning of this or Littleton's dictionary, or were they much fewer in number than on an accurate examination they will be found to be, I should willingly have imputed them to such oversights, as are unavoidable in compiling so difficult a work; in which, not only an accurate knowlege of the English and Latin tongues is absolutely necessary, but also a competent skill in many arts, professions, and mechanical employments, even tolerably to render into Latin the meaning of several terms peculiar to those arts, the common expressions alluding to them, or to many customs peculiar to ourselves. Or if bad Latin words were only substituted for such English ones, the full sense of which could not be expressed by single classical words, they might be looked upon as almost necessary: but I have already given some instances, wherein many proper Latin words have been omitted in those books, and such as either have no authority from the purest Roman writers, or such as are not well accommodated to denote the meaning of the English words, inserted in their stead.

AMONGST the number of those which have no authority from the purest Roman authors, may be justly reckoned the following words, which may be found in both of those dictionaries:

bubetii, for bullbaiters;	depraedicare, to give a good character;
bursarius, a bursar of a college;	birretum, a shepherd's coat;
adfellare, to do one's business;	gallicidium, cock throwing;
cabbala, a cabal;	haustellum, a collock; or pail with one handle;
cancellator, exauctorator, a canceller;	confessionarius, a confessor, or father confessor;
capapellis, a furred cap;	ratifico, to confirm, or ratify;
capa, the cape of a garment;	ratificatio, a confirmation;
capitulari, to capitulate;	conformiter (not in their classic part) conformably;
captivare, to captivate;	congruitas, congruity, or fitness;
fervorium, a chaffern, which Dr. Littleton himself hath	connaturalis (not in their classic part) connatural;
placed amongst his Latin barbarous words;	consecutivus (not in their classic part) consecutive.
hemula, a little chapel;

And I am persuaded there is hardly a page in which some instances of the like sort are not to be found.

Not a few bad Latin words have been admitted in both on the score of analogy only, without ever consulting the Latin classical part, to see whether they might be supported by any classical author; such as gibbositas, bunchiness; though gibbus and gibbosus are both	subsaltatio, a cross caper in dancing;

good;	carnositas, carnosity;
gravamen, a burden, or load;	strangulatorius, choaky;
effractor, a burglar;	circumstantialis, circumstantial;
inhumatio, a burying, where humatio, which is classical, is	circumstantialiter, circumstantially;
omitted in Littleton, and defossio, not classical, inserted	clarigatio, a clearing;
in both;	complacentia, complaisance, or complacency;
castrametatio, the pitching of a camp;	exorcizo, to conjure as priests do;
fustigatio, a caning;	unio, combinatio ecclesiarum, consolidation of parishes;
impostor, a conie catcher or cheat;	congruitas, consonance, or agreeingness;

consubstantialis, consubstantial;
obnato, to swim against;
tangibilis, tangible; where tactilis the classical word is omitted;
contemporaneus, contemporary, of the same time or standing;
contemptibilis, despicibilis, aspernabilis, contemptible;
contemptuosus, contemptuous, or scornful;
aspernanter, contemptuously;
contentatio, content, or contentedness;
contiguitas, contiguity, or nearness;
contingentia, contingency, or chance;
contingenter, contingently, or casually.

As to the reasons, on which I have proceeded in excepting against the several words and forms of expression above mentioned, found in the aforesaid Latin and English dictionaries, I must beg leave to refer the reader to an account of the several Roman writers, whose authority I have made use of in compiling this work, subjoined to this preface.

I SHALL now lay before the reader some instances collected from the said dictionaries and Coles's, that concern the accommodating the Latin words and phrases to the English ones, "which ought to express, according to the rule laid down above, as near as the nature of the two languages, and the different customs of both people, will admit, the same ideas and conceptions of the things designed to be conveyed by them."

A ball to play with, Pila trigonaria.] The word trigonarius is not to be found in their Latin classical parts, nor, so far as I know, in any Roman author; and pila trigonalis is there rightly defined to be a three cornered ball, that they (the ancient Romans) exercised themselves with at bathing. How doth this express our idea of a ball to play with, agreeable to our customs?

A chuck (or, as we now generally write it chuck) under the chin, Menti attrēctatio.] But attrēctatio in their classical parts is interpreted often handling, which is a very different action from what we mean by a chuck under the chin. I think, ictus levis sub mentum cometh much nearer to our sense of that expression.

A composer at the press, Typotheta, opera typographica.] The words at the press should have been omitted, it being the business of a composer, or compositor, to set up the types in their proper order, and not to work at press. Not to mention the needless repetition which may be observed a few lines after in the two first of the said dictionaries.

To distill, act. Distillo. Distilled, Distillatus. A distiller, Distillator.] Distillo is rightly enough interpreted in their classical parts, to distill and drop down by little and little, and therefore may well be used for to distill or drop; but will by no means serve for the more usual sense of the English word, namely, to distill herbs, or flowers, which is, succum herbarum vel florum subiecto igne elicere. And as for distillator and distillatus, I can find no good authority for either of them; the last is also omitted in their own Latin classical parts.

The fetlock joint in an horse, Cruris & pedis coarticulatio.] But coarticulatio is omitted in their Latin classical parts, as not being used by any good Latin author; articulus crus & pedem conjungens, or cruris & pedis commissura articularis, may be justified from the purest writers. Fetlock is omitted in Littleton's dictionary, but inserted in Cole's, and rendered cirri, subcirri. But none of those authors have thought the last word worthy of a place in their Latin classical parts; and the first, according to their own interpretations, may as well signify the tuft, or crest of feathers on a bird's head, as the locks on an horse's feet.

An hog's cheek sowfed, Sinciput fuillum.] Muriā conditum, or something like it, should have been added to express this sense.

A steed is rendered by Littleton, equus generosus, by Coles, sonipes, equus admissarius.] The first interpretation limiteth the sense of it to a high mettled horse, and the last to that of a stallion: whereas the English word denoting a horse in general, without either of the said restrictions, should be rendered by equus only; or, as taken poetically, by sonipes.

A steel to strike fire with is in both the said dictionaries rendered ignitabulum, and yet in their classical parts that word is interpreted to signify a fire pan, chafing dish, or warming pan; and igniarium, rendered by them a fire steel, or steel to strike fire with.

A stirrup in Littleton is rendered Stapes, subex pedaneus; by Coles, stapes, subex pedaneus, scandula, equitis pedaria mora.] The first word is not to be found in classic writers; subex is used by Gellius for a pilaster to support an image or statue; scandula is interpreted in both dictionaries a slate, lath, or shingle; and mora signifieth a stay, indeed, but in the sense of stopping or delaying, not of staying or propping up. I have therefore rendered it by scabellum vel scamillum equestre pendulum.

A stitch, Sutura, Litt. A stitch in sewing. Punctura, Coles.] Sutura is rather what we call sewing, or a seam, than a single stitch; for which reason, besides futura, I have further explained it by sutura uno fili ductu facta; but punctura signifieth a pricking in general, whether made by a pin, bodkin, sword, &c.

A terrace, or terrass, Aggestus, agger, Litt. Agger, via aggesta, Coles.] I think neither of them sufficiently express what we usually mean by this term, and therefore have put it thus; A terrasse, or terrasse walk, Terrenus agger quo deambulare solemus.

A tutor, Tutor, praeceptor, paedagogus, Litt.] Tutor in Latin signifieth a patron, or guardian, but with us a domestic teacher, wherefore tutor cannot be properly applied to our notion of that word; I have therefore rendered it praeceptor domesticus vel privatus. And for the sense of paedagogus see my Latin classical part.

An upholster, Tapetiarius, culcitarius, Litt. Tapetiarius, plumarius, Coles.] All these Latin words are destitute of classic authority, except plumarius, which denoteth one that dealeth in feathers, and not one who dealeth in beds and other household furniture, according to the usual sense put upon that word; whereof I have substituted Lectorum & alius supellectilis fabricator.

To waddle as a duck, Provolvor, Litt. Motitare, provolvi, Coles.] Provolvor signifieth to be rolled or tumbled, and motito is a word of such a mean class, that Littleton hath omitted it in both his English and classical part; Coles hath it in both parts, and in the latter interpreteth it to move often. I have translated it incessu vacillare.

WHAT course hath been taken in the following work, to avoid such mistakes as those before enumerated, either with regard to the insertion of Latin words destitute of classical authority, or of such as are not well adapted to express the sense denoted by the English, is the next thing that falleth under consideration.

My first care was, that none but classical words should be admitted into this first part thereof, if such could be found; and where those were wanting, I chose rather to make use of a periphrasis in the first place, and afterwards added the Greek or bad Latin words, which yet are carefully distinguished throughout this work from the classical ones, the former by *, and the latter by ||. So that the consultors of this part may know, on the first sight, to what class each word belongeth.

THE bad influence mistakes in books made use of in one's younger years may have on riper age, is too well known to require many examples for the proof of it; but I cannot forbear mentioning a few remarks I have made, which may serve to confirm the truth of this observation, and to shew how careful those persons who have the care of conducting youth in their studies ought to be, in preventing, as much as possible, the putting into their hands those books, by which their tender years may be much prejudiced by false impressions. A considerable author, well known to the learned for his excellent notes and version of Laetius, had been so accustomed from his his youth to the putting e contra for on the contrary, that even in his Latin interpretation of that elegant author he cannot forbear the use of it to explain that writer's contra by. And some late writers have frequently made use of versio, without the least scruple, for version or translation, as it is found in Littleton's dictionary; whereas Stevens, Tachart, and other compilers of Latin dictionaries of good note, have intirely omitted that word, as not being classical in any sense of it. Some editions of Plin. Hist. VIII, 33. speaking of the chameleon, have it indeed; Nec pupillae motu, sed totius oculi versione circumspicit; but Harduin readeth versatione, and saith almost all the manuscripts have it so, and I can find it in no other classic. Hence it is plain, that there is very little or no authority for versio at all; but if the vulgar be admitted to be a true reading of that place in Pliny, yet it is there used in the sense of turning or moving, and not of translating or interpreting into another language. In verbis, conceptibusque castus, saith the anonymous author of a Greek book lately published; agreeable to the same dictionary, which interpreteth conceptus to signify a conceit or notion, and giveth not the least notice that it is only used in that sense by later writers. One can hardly think that any writer so careful in his diction as this and some other late authors seem to be, should use e contra, elumbem, modernus, minutias discutere, and several more such words and expressions, which are not to be supported by the classic writers, unless they had either so long been accustomed to the use of them, as not to have the least scruple as to their authority in the classics, or trusted too much to the dictionary they commonly made use of.

AND how far soever the next following list of words may seem to come short of the purity of the Latin tongue, the younger scholar may be justified in the use of them, if the dictionaries I am speaking of be allowed to be proper standards in this case:

Deauratus instead of inauratus, for gilded;
divisibilis instead of dividuus, for divisible;
efficitivus instead of efficax, for effective;
encomium instead of laudatio, for an encomium;
historiographus instead of historicus, for an historian;
immediate instead of proxime, or nulla re intercedente, for immediately;
insensibilis, instead of insensilis, for insensible;
irrationalis instead of rationis expertus, for irrational;
malefactor instead of maleficus, for a malefactor;
prodigalitas instead of effusio, or prodigentia, for prodigality;
pusillanimitas instead of timiditas, for pusillanimity;

sensibilis instead of sensilis, for sensible;
somnolentus instead of somniculosus, for sleepy;
subditus instead of civis, or regi vel principi subditus, for a subject;
subintelligo instead of intelligo, for to understand;
tangibilis instead of tactilis, for tangible;
tempestuosus instead of procellosus, for tempestuous;
transactio instead of res gestae, for a transaction;
unigenitus instead of unigena, or unicus filius, for only begotten;
unio instead of concordia, for union;
usurpatio instead of iniqua occupatio, or injusta usurpatio, for usurpation.

IN order to avoid such mistakes as these, it was necessary, in the compiling this part of the work, to have frequent recourse to the classical part; it being difficult readily to call to mind, whether several words, which there may be occasion to use, be really classical, or not. I need not relate the labour and fatigue attending this comparison, since every person versed in grammatical learning must be partly sensible of the greatness of it; which probably also is the reason why all our dictionaries are so very defective in this point, that one would imagine the two parts in any one of them not to have been compiled by the same author; but this I do assure the public, that there are very few Latin words or phrases throughout this part (allowance being made for such oversights as may be reasonably supposed to escape a diligent and close application) which gave me occasion to doubt either of their authority in the classic writers, or the particular sense they are by them used in, but what have been carefully compared with the classical part, which, for that reason, was first designedly settled, and printed off.

THIS method of comparing the two parts was the more needful, because, as I have already said, it seemeth to have been entirely neglected in all the Latin and English dictionaries I have yet met with; and this neglect I take to have been one great occasion of their numerous mistakes. In Latin, as well as English and other languages, the Substantive, Adjective, Adverb, and some other parts of the same word regularly differ only in the termination or last syllable, which is formed according to the usage peculiar to each language; as in English, grateful, gratefully, gratefulness; in Latin, gratus, grate, gratia. In the language last mentioned these are called conjugata, and one or more of them are frequently destitute of classical authority, though the rest are in common use; hence ariseth some difficulty to learners, and many have been led as it were insensibly into mistakes by the carelessness of the compilers of Latin Dictionaries with regard to this matter. Affluenter, as I observed before, is inadvertently inserted in Littleton for abundantly, which is not to be found in any classical writer, though the other conjugates, affluo, affluens, and affluentia are of undoubted authority; agilis and agilitas are classical, but agiliter is not; animose and animosus are good, but animositas, though admitted in Littleton's classical part as such, is justly, whether designedly or not, omitted in his English part under animosity; congestus is classical, but its conjugates, congeste, congestim, congestio, have been introduced into the Latin tongue since the corruption of its purity by careless or ignorant writers; and so of many more. The settling all the words of this sort occurring in this part required both much time and labour in frequently turning to the classical part, and yet without this method many mistakes in this point, handed down from one to another by the writers of our Latin dictionaries, must have remained still uncorrected.

THE mentioning these conjugates bringeth to my mind another case not much unlike them, which hath occasioned me some expense of labour and care, though very very little regarded by those who have preceded me in this path; namely, the endeavouring to carry not only the same explications through all the conjugates of the same English word, but the ranging the Latin words, in the same order under each of them, so far as is consistent with our common usage of those words, and the method in this work generally observed, of placing the several words of each declension and conjugation together. By this arrangement the idea is continued, the differences with regard to the formation of the words in each language are more obvious, and the import and force of each is rendered more perspicuous. Examples of these explications, and this arrangement of the Latin words, may be seen under.

sensible ,	strict ,	sullen ,	sullenness ;	tediously ,	thoughtful ,	thoughtfulness ;	thoughtlessly ,
sensibleness ,	strictly ,	sullenly ,	tedious ,	tediousness ;	thoughtfully ,	thoughtless ,	thoughtlessness .
and sensibly ;	strictness ;

THE difficulty of accommodating such Latin words as may well express the meaning of the English, is in some words very great, which seemeth to have deterred former writers on this subject even from attempting to render many of them into Latin. Yet considering that some assistance in such cases must be more eligible to learners, than to be left intirely destitute of any, I have endeavoured to render into Latin all such words and expressions, however difficult, as I found to be of common use amongst us. If, in some of these, I have not so clearly or succinctly expressed the full sense of the English, as could be wished; yet I flatter myself the consultors will at least find so much assistance in these difficult cases, as to be the better enabled to accommodate them to their own liking. The word set, denoting a complete suit of any thing, is applied to a great number of things, as, a set of China, a set of furniture, a set of diamonds, &c. And yet, as common as this sense of that word is, I find not the least hint of it in any of our Latin dictionaries; nor of some other senses of it, which the reader may find inserted in this work. To enumerate all the expressions to which the word set is even applied in this sense; would have been not only difficult, but tedious too; so many however are inserted herein, as I think may be sufficient to instruct the learner how to render into Latin all others of that class. The same method is observed in other cases of the like nature. The words vestis vestimentum, &c. are too general to express what we mean by a suit, or complete suit of clothes; wherefore I have added, as a farther explication, vestium simul indutarum omnis apparatus vel syntbesis. The word stuff, hath very many significations, but I have contented myself with enumerating the most common, and giving such hints as I hope may be serviceable in rendering any of the rest properly into Latin.

As the best writers in the Latin tongue have always been very cautious of admitting Greek words, excepting in terms of art, where is a sort of necessity for using them; so I have inserted the Latin words always first, and afterwards annexed the Greek, but with this mark *.

THE number of Latin words paralleled with the English in the dictionary I now offer to the public, is much greater than usual in this sort of books; and there are scarce any English Verbs which admit of different significations, but several Latin phrases, besides their parallels in single words, are annexed, which are not to be found in others; most of these being put in the infinitive mood, and followed by the cases proper to such expressions, young learners will be more easily instructed as to their grammatical construction, than they can be by words at length. The more inquisitive persons may satisfy their curiosity as to what hath been done in this point, by comparing the following words with any performance of this nature yet published in our tongue:

adorn,	block,	discommode,	husband,	murder,	put,	sensible,	suspect,
advance,	brand,	discharge,	imagine,	need,	quarter,	service,	tell,
affront,	business,	dumps,	immortalize	notion,	rail,	set,	thought,
aid,	cast,	eloquence,	impasse,	object,	range,	sir,	traduce,
anger,	censure,	exact,	inform,	order,	recompense,	solace,	transcend;
appease,	chance,	exceeding,	justify,	palliate,	regulate,	specify,	transgress;
appetite,	charge,	express,	keep,	parley,	relief,	spring,	turn,
arbitrate,	charm,	face,	lay,	pay,	remembrance,	stain,	view,
arms,	comfort,	famish,	look,	pine,	resolve,	state,	umbrage, asperse,	commend,	flatter,	make,	pleasure,	respect,	strain,	weigh,
assault,	concern,	forget,	mend,	power,	revive,	succour,	wit,
assist,	contend,	friend,	miss,	prejudice,	run,	suppose,	wonder,
batle,	count,	go,	moral,	process,	scamper,	surmise,	world,
bend,	debt,	band,	mortification,	prospect,	scrape,	susceptible,	wrong;
birth,	delight,	help,	move,	puff,	scruple,

It cannot, I think, be reasonably expected, that every Latin phrase inserted herein, should in all respects exactly answer the use the Romans made of them; since their customs in many cases were very different from ours; and to be over scrupulous in this case might deprive us of many single words, as well as phrases, witness the terms for the different parts of their habits, exercises, &c. I hope it will be thought sufficient, if their phrases are as nearly accommodated to our form of expression; as the difference in the customs of the two people will admit of. For example, though incidere linum doth not agree with our custom in breaking open letters, it not being usual with us to fasten our letters with a thread, as the Romans did, and as even now the Italians getterally do; yet it denoteth the same thing that we mean by breaking open a letter. And among the Roman writers we meet with ceras implere, for to write a long letter; ultima cera, for the last part of it; creta obsignare, to seal it; inducere, to make a rasure, or blot out something; all which allude to Roman customs very different from ours. As likewise the single words supra and infra in Latin books no otherwise signify before and after, than as they allude to the Roman way of writing on rolls, whence also books were called volumina.

MOREOVER, that nothing might be wanting which I thought could any way contribute to the ease and advantage of learners, many cautions, definitions, hints, and rules are added by way of note throughout this part. Many English words, though derived immediately from the Latin, yet vary much in their most usual sense from the signification thereof in the Latin tongue. Prevent is now very seldom used in the sense of the Latin, to go before, in order to remove any impediment or danger; though this sense of it was not uncommon in our tongue at the time when the English Liturgy was compiled, as appeareth by the frequent use of it in this sense. Subscription properly signifieth only a writing one's name under, or at the bottom of an instrument, in token of consent thereto; but now to do a thing by subscription hath a different meaning. Usurpation, in English, always denoteth an unjust occupation of what belongeth to another, but in Latin signifieth generally only a using, without any reproachful imputation. I thought it therefore adviseable to give notice of such things as these by way of note, to prevent learners from being deceived by this different use of some words in the two languages. Examples of these may be seen under.

become,	deal,	hen,	man,	must,	sumpter horse,	tierce,	yet;
by,	give,	in,	merchant,	saunter,	sycamore tree,

and in many other places, too tedious to be enumerated.

THE declensions of Nouns, and conjugations of Verbs are denoted by the figures 1, 2, 3, &c. unless in such of them as vary from the general rules proper to each, in regard either to the gender of the Noun, or preterperfect tense of the Verb; in these latter both the genitive cases and genders of the Nouns are given, as well as the preterperfect tenses of the Verbs; so that the younger scholars will have no occasion, in translating English into Latin, to consult the classical part to know the gender, method of declining, or forming the single parts of speech, or to learn from thence the grammatical construction.

To conclude this head, I have spared no pains to make this part as useful as possible, not only for the more immediate service of Latin schools, but also of those gentlemen who may have occasion to correspond with foreigners in the Latin tongue. For some persons, who have been pretty conversant with that language, and are able to read a classic author with ease, without frequently consulting a Latin dictionary, yet may stand in need of such assistance, when they have occasion to translate English into Latin; in which case the really valuable Latin dictionaries of Doletus, Stephens, Faber, Tachart, or others, will stand them in little stead. The more common law Latin terms are also continued throughout this part, under their proper heads, which are principally designed for the use of those who follow that profession, but some knowledge of them may be also serviceable to other persons; these are always separated from the classical words by this mark ||.

THE Appendages to this part are:

1. THE Index geographicus, containing the English and Latin names of kingdoms, countries, districts, rivers, cities, towns, and the more remarkable villages of the universe, in a concise, and yet more exact method, than is usually to be met with in books of this sort.

2. The more usual Christian names of men and women; and a short sketch of the manner of translating English surnames into Latin, as used in our ancient records.

I now proceed to lay before the public the alterations and improvements made in

II. THE Latin classical part; which being designed partly for the interpretation of the classical writers, and partly as a standard for the Latin tongue, ought to contain "all the words found in any good editions of the several Latin authors generally allowed to be classical, with proper marks and notes accurately distinguishing those which rarely occur, or are only read in authors of an inferior class, or in the poets, from those which are undoubtedly classical, and used by good writers in prose; together with their etymologies, so far as they can be fixed with any certainty or good probability; and an exact and clear interpretation of all their different senses ranged in their due order, beginning with those nearest to their originals; as also the proper vouchers or authorities for every sense so given."

As the justness and propriety of any word or expression in the modern languages is commonly determined by its usage amongst those, who are reputed the most polite speakers or writers in them; so in the Latin tongue this justness and propriety can be settled only by pertinent examples produced out of the classic authors, whose works are preserved to our times. For this having been for many ages a dead language, no other method now remaineth for acquiring an accurate knowledge thereof, than a diligent search into, and exact imitation of, their excellent writings. Where-ever the Latin grammars or dictionaries deviate from these, their authority will have but very little weight with persons capable of forming a true judgment in these matters.

THE plan on which all our Latin dictionaries are compiled, even supposing that plan to be well executed, appeareth to me to be inconsistent with the accuracy required to fix either the significations or authorities in such a manner, as may be safely depended upon.

FOR in their English interpretations of the Latin words, the writers have generally retained the senses given by their predecessors, much in the same order as they found them, without a due regard to the method which ought to be carefully observed in this case, namely, to range the several senses given according to their nearness to, or remoteness from the original meaning of the Latin word; and seem to have been industrious only in adding some new senses they occasionally met with in reading classic authors, which could not be inserted in their proper places, without new modelling the whole; and this required too great an expense of labour and time for them to attempt; and yet without it all additions or improvements tended rather to make their dictionaries worse, as being still more disorderly and confused.

AND as to the authority, or goodness and badness of the Latin words, some of these writers have omitted all vouchers, who might attest the truth of the interpretations by them given; others have cited one author only, even for those Latin words, to which they themselves have affixed many different significations; which must leave persons, studious of accuracy, at a very great uncertainty, whether the author so cited hath used the word in the particular sense they have occasion for.

BESIDES, the citation of AUTHORITIES can be of very little service, unless it is done with such exactness, as always to name some good author to every word, as well as to every particular signification of that word, which is represented as classical; and in those of an inferior rank, to cite truly the best author who maketh use of them. For if a certain and fixed method be not carefully observed in this point, how is it possible for any person, entrusted with the direction of a learner's studies for attaining the knowledge of the purity and elegance of the Latin tongue, to give any proper rules, by the observation of which his scholar may be sure not to be led into errors?

SUPPOSE it should be given as a direction to a young scholar, that whatever words he shall find in his dictionary as cited from Cicero, Caesar, Terence, or Livy, are unquestionably good; he may reasonably conclude, that the words in which neither one of these, nor indeed any other classic author is referred to, must be such as cannot be supported by the authority of the Roman writers, and consequently are such as he ought not to admit in any of his compositions; and yet are unquestionably of good authority, but no author is cited for any of them either in the Cambridge dictionary, or any edition of Littleton, so far as I can find upon a careful examination, which yet in such cases are generally the only books the learner hath to rely upon; for Coles hath omitted almost all citations of this nature. Though it must be owned, in justice to the editors of the Cambridge dictionary, that they have cited authorities for many other words, which are left entirely destitute of them in all the editions of Littleton: but of these I have taken no notice, as not coming under my design of observing here only such deficiencies, as are common to both those dictionaries.

MOREOVER, if a learner should be told, that whatever Latin words are not contained in his dictionary, are certainly bad, what can he think of

ablaqueandus ,

All which are read in the classics, and yet are entirely omitted in the Cambridge and Littleton's dictionaries.

MANY Latin words also, which are not to be found in any of the classic writers, are inserted in those books, without any notice given; either by naming the authors who use them, or any particular mark which may distinguish them from such as are certainly classical; as,

abinſperato ,	abjuratio ,	accino ,	aſtitatio ,	acupiſtus ,	adaptatus ,	adjuratio ,
abintra ,	ablatio ,	acquiſitio ,	aſtitatus ,	adaequatio ,	addite ,	admaturate ,

affectate,	aliquorsum,	alteratio,	angelica,	archiepiscopalis,	arterialis,	axillaris.
agiliter,	aliquosque,	amarulentia,	animitus,	archiepiscopatus,

These all occur under the letter A, in those two dictionaries considered jointly, and if they were examined separately, the number would be very considerably increased; what then is to be expected in all the other letters?

Poetry, say the Cambridge editors very justly, is known to have a set of words peculiar to her court, which we have distinguished by a flower [*] placed before them. We judged such a distinction very beneficial to youth, who are apt so use one instead of the other, &c. I cannot but agree with these learned gentlemen in this observation, and have endeavoured to attend to it throughout this work, though I find it hath been neglected in most of the editions of Dr. Littleton's dictionary, and particularly in that lately published. The reader may satisfy his curiosity in this respect, by turning to the words aerifer, aeripes, aëripes, aerisonus, aëstifer, aethra, alifer, aliger, alipes, altisonus, alitonans, altivolans, &c. to each of which in this dictionary is prefixed a ♣.

It ought indeed to be observed, by way of excuse for Dr. Littleton, that he could not be furnished with several editions of the classics, which would have been very serviceable to him in compiling his dictionary, had they been extant in his time. Particularly, the editions printed for the use of the Dauphin, now so commonly used in our Latin schools, were then unknown amongst us. Sallust and Florus, which were published first, were printed at Paris in MDCLXXIV, and the imprimatur to Littleton's dictionary is dated 1 Jan. MDCLXXVII; whence we may fairly conclude, that even these two did not come to the doctor's hand time enough for him to make any considerable use of them in his dictionary. And Caesar, Livy, Tacitus, Suetonius, Ovid, Horace, Statius, with some others, were not printed till several years after the publication of his book. The excellent edition of Pliny's Natural History (that storehouse of the Roman tongue, as the editors of the Cambridge dictionary call it) published by Harduin, was first printed in MDCLXXXV. To say nothing of Gronovius's celebrated edition of Cicero's works in MDCXCII, or of the several valuable editions of the other classics published since Littleton's time by Graevius, Burmans, Henninius, Broukhusius, and divers other learned men abroad; or by bishop Leng, Dr. Bentley, Talbot, Davis, and others among ourselves.

BUT it is somewhat surprizing, that the editors of the Cambridge dictionary (to say nothing of the later editions of Littleton) who were undoubtedly persons equal to the task, as appeareth by their valuable improvements in several parts of their work, especially under the letters above mentioned, and who affirm in their preface, that they had free and constant recourse to the Dauphin editions, and that their compleat indices were of great use to them, should yet have taken no notice of the following mistakes, which might easily have been rectified by the assistance afforded in those editions.

Abedo in both dictionaries is attributed to Tacitus, and the words of Tacitus are cited in the Cambridge edition thus: Exorta vis locustarum abederat quicquid herbidum aut frondosum. The words are in Annal xv, 5, 4, where Berneggerus, Ryckius, and all the editions I have consulted, read ambederat.

Adblandior is attributed to Horace, but upon a strict search I can find no such word in any part of that author; the words Cessit immanis tibi blandienti, Carm. iii, 11, 15, seem to come the nearest to it.

Adcognosco is falsely attributed to Quintilian; but it is found in some bad editions of Seneca de Beneficiis, ii, 13, where for Ostendisque te non agnoscere ista bona, quibus tantum inflaris, as it is now read in the Variorum edition, was read in some former editions adcognoscere, and in others again adagnoscere.

Adduplico is fathered upon Plautus, which I take to have been occasioned by a depraved reading of the passage in his Poen. iii, 1, 61. Adduplicabit omne furtum, where the Variorum edition hath id duplicabit omne furtum.

Advocamentum is attributed to Pliny, but upon inquiry I cannot find that any tolerable Latin author hath used this word; I take the mistake to have been occasioned by a corrupt reading of advocamenta for avocamenta in Plin. Epist. viii, 5. Ero ergo suspensus pro homine amicissimo, dum admittere avocamenta, & cicatricem pati possit; quam nihil aequae ac necessitas ipsa, & dies longa, & satietas doloris indicit.

Abortus, a, um, is attributed to Statius, and indeed some old editions read aborta sidera, Theb. viii, 32; but the Variorum and others now read oborta for aborta.

Abscosio is cited from Pliny, and even the industrious Faber saith of it, Affertur ex Plin. viii, 16, in lexicis; verum libri habent abscondente. But, upon a careful examination, I cannot find either abscosio, or abscondente, in the place referred to, or in any other place of either of the Plinies. The words of Pliny the historian, who ix, 17, in the common editions, but ix, 26, of Harduin's, hath the following sentence, Mugilum natura ridetur, in metu capite abscondito, totos se occultari credentium, seem to come the nearest.

Absento is attributed to Claudian, who, de Raptu Prof. iii, 214, hath, according to some editions, Colloquio patriisque procul absentaverit astris, though inconsistent with the measure of the verse; but the more correct ones, and particularly that published by W. Pyrro for the use of the Dauphin, read mandaverit.

Annuatim is attributed to Pliny, but on a strict search it will be found to be an old mistake handed down from one dictionary-writer to another. For in an edition of Laurentius Valla's Elegantiae, printed at Basil in MDLXXI, lib. vi, c. 60, against Valla's words: Quidam adverbium hinc ducunt (speaking of the word quotannis) quod est annuatim, ut Plinius libro duodecimo dicens: Herodoto teste, qui tradit singula millia talentum annuatim thuris pensasse Arabes regibus Persarum, si codex verus est, is this note: Annua habet Frobenianus Plinii codex ab Erasmo recognitus. Harduin also readeth annuo in that place. The words cited are in his edition xii, 40, of the common editions xii, 17.

Auriginosus is by mistake attributed to Horace. But I can find no other authority for it than that of an old Glossary, which explaineth illegimus by it.

BUT to say no more on this head, nor of many Greek words inserted in this part, such as acanthion, acentra, acrocolia, adecastus, adiaphoria, aenigmatistes, which not being read in any classic author, ought not to have been admitted in a Latin classical dictionary; I beg leave only to observe, that Littleton hath both inserted the word adespotus in its alphabetical order in his dictionary, and used it in his Latin preface, even in a sentence, in which he accuseth Cooper of the same fault whereof he himself is so guilty.

AS to the number of Latin words, though I have rejected some which are in those dictionaries, as having none of the classic writers to attest their authority, yet I have inserted very many classical words omitted in them, a specimen of which I have already given under the letter A, and the reader, on comparing this dictionary with theirs, will find the number in the rest of the letters to be very considerable.

THE next thing falling under consideration is the marks and notes, which may serve accurately to distinguish those words that rarely occur, or are only read in authors of an inferior class, from those which are undoubtedly classical. I have already taken notice of several mistakes committed by others with regard to this point, though requiring the greatest accuracy; many words of the first rank among the classics having no author's name annexed to them, several classical words being omitted, and a great number of words, which do not appear in the classic writers, inserted without proper marks, by which they may be distinguished from those which are undoubtedly classical.

BUT there is another great fault not uncommon in the writers before mentioned, which is the attributing several bad words to good authors, and good words to bad ones; this must necessarily mislead those who unwarily depend upon their citations. It may be convenient to produce some instances of both kinds, before I proceed to the account of the method I have taken for settling this affair in a better manner.

Humiliatus is attributed to Cicero in both those dictionaries, but they seem to have been led into that error by Calpine's wrong citation of Cicero's words, Nat. Deor. ii, 47, Animalia humiliata, ut cibum terrestrem facile rostris contingant; whereas all the valuable editions of that author read humilitas instead of humiliata, except Aldus's, which hath humilia.

Fastuosus is fathered upon Cicero, but I cannot find that word in any part of Cicero's writings, or in any tolerable Latin author.

Jaculo is attributed to Claudian, but the index to the Dauphin's edition of that author exhibiteth no such word, neither can I find it used by any classical Latin author.

Fjunatio is cited as used by Celsus, but is, so far as I can find, used only by authors of a much inferior class, such as Tertullian, or other writers since him.

Fentator is attributed to Eutropius, but I find it not in him, or any other Roman author.

Ignavitas is cited from Justin, but with what justness may be seen in my account of that word.

Illaqueatio is attributed to Livy, and illaqueator to Tacitus, but neither of them can be supported by the authors cited for them, or indeed any other of the classics; though illaqueatus is undoubtedly classical.

Illatratio is attributed to Tacitus, but after much search I can neither find it in his works now extant, nor indeed in any other classic author.

Regenerator is attributed to Augustin, an author of no weight in this case; but that word in the classical sense is used even by Pliny the historian, as may be seen in my account of it.

Regor is referred to Boethius, who lived in the fifth century, when the purity of the Latin tongue was much depraved, and yet that word is common in Cicero, and others of the first class of Roman writers.

Regyro is marked as bad or obsolete, though read in Florus, as well as Varro R. R. i, 57.

Remote, and Remotius its comparative, are omitted in both those dictionaries, though the comparative is read even in Cicero.

Scamillum is cited as if only to be found in Priscian or Apuleius, authors much inferior to Vitruvius, in whose works the consultor of this dictionary may easily find it by the directions given under that word.

Scaphus also is used by the same author, though in those dictionaries it is marked as a bad word, and referred to Cael. Rhodiginus.

Separate, a word of no authority, is attributed to Cicero.

Serro is cited in both as read in Silius Italicus, but his words are Qualisque comantes auro fervavit ramos Junonius anvis, lib. vi, 184, as read in Cellarius's, Drakenborch's, and all other editions, which I have consulted. They might perhaps be led into this mistake by Stephens's Latin Thesaurus, who read ferravit in this place; and yet, what is worthy of notice, this mistake is continued in the late edition of Stephens.

Sonax, which is used in so common a book as Ovid's Metamorphoses, hath only the name of Apuleius annexed to it in the said dictionaries.

Adnavigo is marked as obsolete in the last edition of Littleton (but not in the former editions, nor in that of Cambridge) though used by Pliny H. xxxv, 10. and adnavigatus is read in the same author, xxxvi, 12.

THAT the younger scholars have need of some more certain directions, as to the authorities of Latin words, than are afforded them in the dictionaries now generally used, must, I think, by this time be evident to every impartial and competent judge in this affair. It is therefore proper to inform the publick what measures I have taken in this work for reducing this matter to a greater certainty, for the guidance of learners, in a case which is of no small importance in speaking or writing Latin with tolerable exactness. To effect this, I have considered the whole Latin tongue as reducible to the following classes.

THE first is of such words or phrases as are not only found in the purest Roman authors, but also became of common use. As to these, the consultor is generally referred to some author who useth them, by the citation of the particular book, chapter, or verse, without any other mark.

THE second is of such as are found but seldom in any good author, and, though used by some writer of the first rank, did not afterwards so far prevail as to be commonly made use of by the authors who succeeded him; of these I have given the consultors notice, as may be seen in abludo, abnato, abnocto, adareo, addecet, addensco, addenso, addivino, addubitatus, adedo, adbaefio, adbaefus, adbalo, adbamo, adborresco, adimpleo, admaturo, admordeo, adnutrio, adverbero, adversator, and many others, by subjoining Raro occ. or occurrit, vix alibi, or nescio an alibi. This I have done through the whole work, by way of admonition, that words of the same signification, and more frequent use, ought to be preferred to the words of this class.

THE third is of those which were looked upon as obsolete when the Latin tongue arrived to its most flourishing state, about the reigns of the two first Caesars; such as abemo, abjugo, abjurasso, ablectus, abluviu, abmitto, abneco, abnueo, abnuto, aborior, absumedo, accepso, aceo, aditio, adjurgium, adjurgo, adnieto, adobruo, aesti, aethiopus, &c. These are marked with an obelisk †.

THE fourth is of those which are met with chiefly in the Latin poets, as, abeneus, abenus, alifer, aliger, allifonus, allitonans, &c. These are denoted by a flower de luce ✽.

THE fifth is of such Greek words as occur in some classic writer, especially those written or printed in the Roman character; to these I have generally annexed such Latin words for them, as are either of the same import, or such as come the nearest to it, where-ever my utmost care and diligence could discover them. For the difficulty of doing this exactly is evident from the reason why such Greek words were used by the purest Latin authors, namely, because there was no Latin word, at least occurring to them, which sufficiently expressed the idea they designed to convey by them. Examples may be seen in acroama, agon, agonista, agyria, &c. These are denoted by a star *.

THE sixth is of those words or phrases which are met with only in authors of an inferior rank, who wrote in the decline of the Latin tongue; to most of which I have subjoined better Latin words marked with an obelisk turned thus ‡, as may be seen in ablator, abliguritor, abominatio, abominosus, acceptabilis, acceptilatio, &c. These are denoted by two parallel lines placed perpendicularly, thus ||.

THE last is of such as have been either formed by later writers in analogy to the classical words, or introduced into the Latin tongue from divers other languages by historians, lawyers, or ecclesiastic authors. Too many of these have been inserted in our Latin dictionaries, to the no small prejudice of the purity of the Latin tongue. The better sort of them I have retained, because they may be of service to students in those professions, especially that of the civil law; but have utterly rejected many others, as quite foreign to the design of a classical Latin dictionary. Those persons who may be desirous of better acquaintance with them, may be supplied from books purposely designed to explain them, as Du Fresne's Latin Glossary, &c. These are also marked with ||.

IN giving the ETYMOLOGIES of the Latin words I have for the most part confined myself to one or two, which seemed to me the most probable; persons who are more curious in this matter may consult Vossius, Bekman, and others, who have written largely on this subject. The Hebrew and Greek words, except where the Latin is derived from them, are omitted, as serving rather for a vain ostentation of learning, than affording any real benefit in a work of this nature.

THE several SIGNIFICATIONS of such words as admit of various senses are ranged in a method entirely new, with regard to our Latin dictionaries; as will be obvious on the first inspection; being all numbered by figures, 1, 2, 3, &c. and ranged together in their natural order, beginning with that signification which cometh nearest to the etymology of the word, where that is known, and proceeding gradually to those which are more remote from the original sense, though sometimes the most usual. The primitive signification of words may generally be known by their etymology, relation to their subject, or some parallel or opposite words adjoined to them. One or more Latin examples are added by way of confirmation to each signification, which are likewise ranged together in the same order as the English, and marked by figures; and the particular book, chapter, or verse, wherein these passages in Roman authors so cited may be found, are for the most part carefully referred to. By this means the learner will have a much clearer knowledge of the true signification of every such Latin word, than he possibly could have by those books, wherein the different senses have been set down under each word, as they have been occasionally met with in Latin authors, whether prose or verse; and the consultors, on any scruple, may with ease see, whether the author's words are truly represented and interpreted, which cannot be done without much searching and trouble in the method of general citations. Besides, many senses will occur herein not taken notice of in our Latin dictionaries; many idioms and phrases are more clearly explained; several customs among the Romans better illustrated; and the grammatical construction and government much more largely exemplified, and accounted for; so that some words, especially Verbs having a variety of significations, have run out into a much greater length, than one would at first think necessary in a book, wherein as much brevity, as was consistent with the nature of the work, and completion of my design, hath always been carefully observed.

THE following words, when compared with the accounts given of them by others, will enable the reader to form a tolerable idea of the very great pains taken in settling this part of the work:

Agito,	censeo,	copia,	explico,	induco,	nomen,	res,
ago,	clavus,	corona,	facio,	integer,	nota,	resolvo,
appello,	cohors,	curo,	fides,	lacejjo,	obeo,	sacramentum,
bonum,	colligo,	deduco,	fortis,	lex,	obruo,	sedeo,
cado,	colo,	destino,	gratia,	medius,	pars,	solutus,
capio,	committo,	discedo,	habeo,	mitto,	pasco,	tendo,
caput,	compono,	duco,	homo,	modius,	peto,	and teneo.
causa,	conficio,	effero,	incumbo,	moveo,	popularis,

THERE is no need of acquainting the learned reader with the importance of such passages in Latin authors, wherein two or more words are used to denote the same meaning, commonly known by the name of synonyma, or to denote a contrary meaning, called antitheta, in settling the true signification and force of words; but I think it proper to declare, that a much greater number of these hath been painfully collected, and inserted in their proper places in this book, than can be met with in any, or all the Latin dictionaries now extant. Dr. Littleton hath attempted something in this way, but hath rather followed what he found done by Nizolius, Scot, or others, in this matter, than made any collections from the classics themselves; besides, his placing these synonyms and opposites to words in general, and not as such to any particular senses of those words, rendereth what hath been done by him of little or no service. The synonyma are denoted by =, and the antitheta by x, according to Dr. Littleton's method.

BUT the application I have made of them in the following work, is very different from what others have done. For I have not only made a much larger collection of this sort from all the classic writers, than had been done before; but have also applied them to illustrate and confirm the particular significations of every word, wherever I could possibly find them: and have very often produced examples of both synonyma and antitheta to illustrate the same signification. If a variety of these occurred, I pitched upon such, as, besides the ideas of synonyms, or opposites, contained the syntax, or some useful knowledge in morals or arts.

To what uses I have applied the synonyma may partly be seen in

Abdico , as, so fugit and fatēis abdicat are used by Ovid to express much the same idea;	to denote much the same sense;
abdomen , so sumen and abdomen , as Pliny telleth us, signified the same thing;	abjecte , so abjecte and timide , sordidius and abjectius are used by Cicero ;
abhorrens , so absurdae , and abhorrentes are applied by Livy	abjectio , so debilitatio and abjectio are used by the same author.

Examples of the latter, or the antitheta , occur in
abalienatus , so abalienatum and retinuiſti are opposed by Cicero ;	by the same author;
abalieno , so retinere and abalienarunt are used by the same author;	abjectio , so likewise abjectio and adjectio are opposed;
aberro , so redeat and aberravit , levor and aberro are used	abjectus , thus abjectum and erexi are opposed;
	abjudico , thus judicabit and abjudicabit are also applied.

It is needless to give more examples of these, almost every page abounding with them.

WITH regard to the CITATIONS from Latin authors in this work, and the name of the author annexed to any Latin word in general, I think it convenient to inform the public:

First, THAT I have always endeavoured to shew a due regard to the dignity and established character of the writer; never designedly quoting Quintilian, Curtius, Justin, Juvenal, or others of an inferior class, for words used by Cicero, Caesar, Livy, Virgil, or other writers of the first rank; except in such Latin examples, as contain a synonym or opposite, something remarkable as to the grammatical construction, or with regard to idioms, proverbs, maxims, and moral sentences, or some useful knowledge therein contained. For which reason the quotations from the last named excellent authors, and those from Plautus, Terence, Horace, Ovid, and Pliny, are very numerous in this part.

Secondly, THAT I have been particularly careful in noting all such Latin Nouns, as have but one, two, or three cases only among the classics; are defective or redundant in gender or number; or admit of different senses in different numbers: and have produced such authorities from the Roman writers, as would best prove and illustrate my observations. Examples of these may be seen in abies, acinus, acus, aedes, aether, ager, alex, antae, arbitratus, arbitrium, and auxilium.

THE same method is observed with respect to the Comparative and Superlative degrees in Adjectives, Participials, and Adverbs. For having observed many mistakes with regard to several of these, committed even by learned men, who have trusted too much either to analogy or grammar rules (agillimus in particular in our common English Accidents, and albius in the Latin Grammar, being falsely given as examples of comparison) I have carefully and distinctly set down all the words of this sort, which I have observed to be defective in one or other of the degrees of comparison. Instances of these may be seen in abditus, abjectè, abscissior, absolutissimè, accommodatè, accumulatissimè, adustior, aestuosius, affirmatè, affluens, affluentius, amarè, amarus, amicè, annosus, argutè, asseranter, and assuetus.

IN Verbs also notice is given of those which are defective in person or tense, or when only read in some one person in a particular sense; as in ao, attinco, and aufim.

Thirdly, THAT in citing the Latin classical authors, the following editions of them have been principally made use of:

Apuleius,	Delphini ,	C. Nepos,	Variorum & Delphini ,
Augustae historiae script.	Variorum ,	Nemesianus,	Variorum ,
Ausonius,	Variorum ,	Ovidii Opera,	Delphini & Variorum ,
Boëthius,	Delphini ,	Palladius,	Commellini & Gesneri ,
Caesar,	Delphini ,	Paterculus,	Delphini ,
Calpurnius,	Variorum ,	Perfius,	Delphini ,
Cato,	Commellini & Gesneri ,	Petronius Arbiter,	Burmanni ,
Catullus,	Cantabrigiensis ,	Phaedrus,	Delphini & Bentleii ,
Celsus,	Almeloveeni ,	Plautus,	Gronovii & Delphini ,
Ciceronis Opera,	Gronovii & Verburgii ,	Plinii Nat. Historia	Delphini ,
Claudianus,	Delphini ,	Plinii Epistolae,	Cellarii ,
Columella,	Commellini & Gesneri ,	Propertius,	Cantabrigiensis ,
Curtius,	Pitisci & Delphini ,	Prudentius,	Cellarii ,
Eutropius,	Delphini ,	Quintilianus,	Gibsoni & Burmanni ,

Gellius,	Delphini ,	Senecae Tragoediae,	Schroderi ,
Gratius,	Johnsoni ,	Silius Italicus,	Drakenborchii & Cellarii ,
Horatius,	Cantabrigiensis ,	Statius,	Variorum & Delphini ,
Justinus,	Graevii & Delphini ,	Suetonius,	Gronovii & Ryckii ,
Juvenalis,	Henninii & Delphini ,	Sulpitius Severus,	Variorum ,
Lactantius,	Cellarii ,	Tacitus,	Gronovii & Ryckii ,
Livius,	Hearnii & Clerici ,	Terentius,	Delphini & Bentleii ,
Lucanus,	Variorum ,	Tibullus,	Cantabrigiensis ,
Lucretius,	Fabri & Creechii ,	Valerius Flaccus,	Burmanni ,
Macrobius,	Variorum ,	Valerius Maximus,	Torrentii ,
Manilius,	Scaligeri & Delphini ,	Varro,	Scaligeri ,
Marcellinus,	Gronovii ,	Vegetius,	Stewechii ,
Martialis,	Delphini ,	Aur. Victor,	Pitisci ,
Mela,	Gronovii ,	Virgilius,	Delphini & Masovicii ,
Minucius Felix,	Variorum ,	Vitruvius,	De Lact.

IN some prose writers there is a little difference with respect to the divisions of the chapters, and their subdivisions; wherefore the citations from Cicero in this work are made according to the larger divisions; but in poets the book and verse are near the same in all editions, except in Broukhusius's celebrated editions of Propertius and Tibullus, which differ much in this respect from, I think, all others; for which reason I chose to make my citations from those authors according to the edition of them published at Cambridge in quarto.

Fourthly, THAT although I principally made use of the editions beforementioned, yet I have not confined myself wholly to them, or depended intirely on their authority. For where there was reason to suspect their readings of any passage, I compared them with others in greater esteem (of which a pretty large account is given in another place) and have generally set down the various readings of different editions, so far as I had occasion to make use of them. Examples of various readings may be seen in abedo, abortus, a, um, abvolo, acanthis, accubatio, acetum, addocet, aestuat, aetas, afflictus, us, alacriter, aliquisquam, allevior, altero, alutatio, amineus, amplificè, antecaptus, antistitor, apianus, apolecti, appetitio, armentinus, artocopus, assamenta, assimulor, and occupatio. Besides which, I have sometimes ventured to set down my own opinion, conjecture, or suspicion as to the reading of a place; as in accessor, adborresco, alabarches, amaritas, angelus, antefactum, appingo, arilator, and assentio.

MOREOVER, the reader may find many critical, and, as I hope they will be thought, useful observations in this work, not to be found, so far as I know, in any other book of this kind; particularly in a, abs, aborior, abscissè, absumilis, absque, accessus, adepts, adhibeo, admodum, aerumna, affectatus, age, agema, agnellus, alter, amo, ampliatio, analecta, anima, animadversio, annotinus, apathia, apparitio, aquatio, arbor, arrhabo, arvum, aspernatus, attamen, audaciter, aulicus, auspicium, and autem. These generally have a et prefixed to them.

THE reader will observe, that in this account of what he may expect in this part of my dictionary, I have confined myself only to the first letter A; though the like care, and indeed greater (chiefly with respect to the references to the places in authors whence the citations are made) hath been taken in all the remaining letters; designing at first not to be so particular in this case, as I afterwards found it necessary to be.

VERY many distinctions made by the old Latin grammarians, and some moderns, as Ausonius Popma, and others, such as humani being appropriated to men, and armi to beasts; and invenio, denoting to find things sought for, reprio to find them by chance; though inserted both in Littleton and Cambridge, I have intirely rejected in this work, because they cannot be proved by examples from the classics; and the reader, I persuade myself, by examining my account of those words, will see I had just reason for so doing.

THE idioms and phrases in this work are ranged under the particular senses to which they belong, and not thrown confusedly together after their English explications, as is done in most other Latin dictionaries. To these are prefixed the usual mark ¶.

I THINK it almost needless to mention such things as this dictionary hath in common with others, such as the genders of Nouns, preterperfect tenses of Verbs, the marking of the quantities of syllables, &c. But it may not be amiss to tell the reader, that as I had Stephens's Latin Thesaurus, and other valuable dictionaries continually before me in compiling this work, it can hardly be supposed I could omit any signification of a Latin word fairly proved by them: and I doubt not but it will be found, on a careful examination, that I have given some senses not taken notice of by them, though I have not accumulated so many authorities, but contented myself with one or two only, which, if well chosen, are more convenient for learners.

IN the orthography both of English and Latin words I have generally followed the custom which most prevailleth amongst us; but yet have not omitted to give my sentiments under some particular words, concerning which which my opinion differeth from that more commonly received, especially with regard to the Latin; as may be seen in coelum, femina, baeres, stilus, silva, &c.

If, after a diligent search into the authors referred to by the compilers of dictionaries, I could not find proper authorities for some Latin words; I chose in dubious cases to cite the authorities thus, Steph. Faber, Litt. ex Cic. Plaut., &c. rather than utterly to reject them, in order to excite others to diligence, who in reading over the classics may casually light upon those passages, which have escaped my view.

In turning over the many books necessary for carrying on and compleating this design, and settling the several authorities and different senses of the Latin words in a method never before used in our Latin dictionaries, it is no wonder that some omissions and mistakes have happened, which I am now too sensible of, when it is too late to mend them all; but some few are of such consequence, that I think it needful to give notice of them in the addenda and corrigenda prefixed to this work; and the rest I hope will be candidly imputed to such oversights, as are unavoidable in a work of this nature.

I DESIRE it may be observed, that the words synonima, antitheta, metaph. &c. are designedly used in the largest sense those words are capable of, to prevent some inconveniencies which might have ensued the making use of some other words of the like sense.

In the Latin part, with which I began, after a careful and attentive perusal of the learned dissertations of the reverend Dr. Littleton, prefixed to the several letters of the alphabet, wherein he accurately treateth of their original, figure, name, and power, their distributions, and orders, from which their frequent changes into each other to soften or raise the sound, proceed (all which notices are so useful and even necessary in any tongue, particularly in etymologies, orthography, and prosody, that in them all ancient grammarians have laid the foundation of their works) I at first designed to publish them, with the addition of some remarks of my own, in a different character; but afterwards considering that the more useful they were, so much the less they ought to be writ in a tongue young scholars must be supposed to be ignorant of, I concluded to write my dissertations in English. This I have the rather done, because several remarks therein may be of use to English readers likewise, being a kind of Rationale as well of the English, as Latin tongue.

BUT it is time to proceed to the last part of this work, in the account of which I shall be very brief.

III. IN the historical and poetical part I have confined myself to such matters only, as are proper to the subjects they are designed to explain; namely persons, places, remarkable events, and the mythology occurring in the classic authors; and have pointed out the several places in the writers, where they may be found. The ancient geography hath been settled chiefly from those excellent performances of Harduin in his notes upon Pliny, and Cellarius's larger work upon that subject.

I THOUGHT it needless to insert the maps of Rome or Italy in this place, both because the scale of maps of the same size as this book would have been abundantly too small to convey any useful and just knowledge of those places, and because there is lately published in octavo Cellarius's Geographia antiqua, with maps and proper indexes accommodated to the use of grammar schools.

THE Appendages to this part are:

1. THE Roman Calendar with notes: of which I have spoken more particularly in the Latin preface prefixed to it.

2. THE coins, weights, and measures used by the Romans: the knowledge of which is certainly very useful, and it requireth much time and application to be well acquainted with them; but the value and capacity of them are so well explained already by the late Dr. Arbutnot, that I have contented myself in this place with giving only a summary calculation of them from the tables of that ingenious and learned author. Some farther account of these may be seen under their proper heads in the classical part of this book.

3. THE chronology: which, in a classical dictionary, I think, ought not to be intermixed with ecclesiastical affairs. The best account of the Roman consuls, and other chief officers of Rome, is, in the opinion of some friends of mine, that printed at Amsterdam in MDCCV, by Almeloveen, which I have therefore chiefly followed. As this part is mostly designed for the use of those who have made some advances in the learned languages, I think it proper to be in Latin only.

4. THE notes of abbreviation used by the Romans. Some of these I had inserted in my dissertations on the several letters of the alphabet, and designed not to place them here; but being persuaded by friends, that a fuller account of them might be useful to some persons in reading ancient coins and inscriptions, I have given them from the Breviarium of Sextorius Ursatus.

5. THE Law Latin dictionary: which, though not so perfect as was once proposed, before the proceedings in law were confined by parliament to the English tongue; yet I flatter myself will be found more useful for the understanding records and forms of law written or printed in that language, than any of this kind before published.

I COULD wish this book had been printed on a larger character, for the sake of some gentlemen, who may be discouraged from making use of it, because of the smallness of the letter; but it being designed chiefly for the use of our British youth, I presume it will be thought large enough for that purpose.

THUS having brought the labour of many years to a period, and given the public a faithful account of what may be expected from this work; I hope no person will be so uncharitable, as to impute any thing said in relation to the present Latin dictionaries to a design of casting reflexions on the memories of their authors; but that it will be looked upon, as it is true in fact, to be done only with a view of justifying myself to the world for publishing this performance.

THE assistance I have had from the Dauphin and other indexes to the classics, I freely acknowledge; but am in a particular manner obliged to those correct editions and useful indexes which have been published by the learned author of the classical Indices.

I LIKEWISE acknowledge myself to have been much assisted in this toilsome and tedious work by the learned and industrious Mr. Samuel Patrick, the editor of Hederic's Lexicon, who hath taken no small pains in correcting and improving this dictionary.

To conclude, as I am far from desiring to censure the performances of others, and would not, when forced to say some things in vindication of myself, be thought so to do; so I hope no person will cast reflexions on me, who have no other design in publishing this book, than to be serviceable in propagating useful knowledge among my own countrymen, for whose good I heartily wish it were much more compleat than it is. But this I hope will not be denied me by competent judges, that the method taken herein is the best plan towards a compleat Latin dictionary, that hath yet appeared in our language.

AS Mr. Ainsworth, the author of this Dictionary, died since the former edition of it was published ; I hope it will not be unacceptable to the reader to see a short account of his life, as well as a true narrative, how this work was begun, carried on, and brought to its present state.

MR. ROBERT AINSWORTH was born at Woodyale in the parish of Eccles, four miles from Manchester in the county of Lancaster, September 1660, and was educated at Bolton in that county, and afterwards taught school in the same town.

Some years after he came to London, and was master of a considerable boarding school at Bethnal Green, at which time he wrote and published a short treatise of grammatical institution. From thence he removed to Hackney, and afterwards to other places near London, where he taught with good reputation many years, when having acquired a moderate fortune he left off, and lived privately. He had likewise a turn both for Latin and English poetry, and some single poems of his have been printed in each of those languages. He died at London, April 4, 1743, aged 83, and was buried, according to his own desire, in the cemetery of Poplar, under the following monumental inscription composed by himself.

ROB. AINSWORTH ET UXOR EJUS ADMODUM SENES
DORMITURI VESTEM DETRITAM HIC EXUERUNT, NOVAM PRIMO MANE SURGENTES INDUTURI.
DUM FAS, MORTALIS, SAPIAS, ET RESPICE FINEM.
HOC SUADENT MANES, HOC CANIT AMRAMIDES.
TO THY REFLEXION, MORTAL FRIEND,
TH' ADVICE OF MOSES I COMMEND: BE WISE AND MEDITATE THY END*.

ABOUT the year 1714 a proposal was made to some eminent booksellers of London, for compiling a new Compendious English and Latin dictionary, upon the same scheme with Faber's Thesaurus, which was approved of. And at coming then under consideration, what person of sufficient ability and leisure could be found, and prevailed on, to undertake so laborious and extensive a work, Mr. Ainsworth was mentioned, as a proper person for such a design. And upon their acquainting him with it, he soon after undertook it ; and how well it has been executed, may best appear, from the general approbation the first edition has met with from the public.

While this work was preparing, the execution of it was attended with so many difficulties, that it went on very slowly for a long time, and for some years was intirely suspended. But afterwards, on account of Mr. Ainsworth's advanced age, and a disorder that affected his eyes, I was desired to assist in reviewing the copy ; and at his request, and the booksellers concerned, accepted of it, after about a dozen sheets had been wrought off ; which may serve as an apology not only for the smallness of the print, but likewise for the defects in the beginning of the Latin part, particularly in omitting the references to the several authors, occasioned by the brevity at first designed ; as it was then chiefly intended for a school book, which view was afterward enlarged by adding the authorities. In the prosecution of this province therefore it was necessary to consult the authors themselves, and point out the particular places, as near as possible from whence the several quotations were taken. And for this end I furnished myself with all such editions of the Latin classics, as might most readily direct me to find out the several authorities referred to, or examine the correctness of the text ; both which purposes can rarely be answered by one edition of the same writer. And thus much may suffice for the former edition.

As to what respects this new edition, I shall give an account of it in the order of the several parts of the work.

I. NOTWITHSTANDING the great pains taken in the first edition, and the almost infinite labour of finding out the several passages taken from Roman authors, and comparing of different editions ; many things occurred too late to be inserted in their proper places, which however I carefully endeavoured to note, and have supplied in this edition. Moreover, to render the Latin part more compleat, I found it necessary to read over several of the Latin classics, particularly that illustrious but too much neglected historian Livy, who has furnished a great many words not before inserted in any book of this sort ; as also Silius Italicus, Cornelius Celsus, Columella, and several others ; so that no pains have been spared in order to improve this work in that respect.

And further, a great number of Participles not occurring in any former dictionaries, and collected by my own observation, are here introduced. These are so very numerous, that there are few pages, in which several instances of them may not be found, and therefore need not be particularly specified. Besides which, the reader will meet with a great many principal Latin Verbs in their passive sense, which was before omitted.

II. As to what has been done in the English Latin part, besides correcting some faults, which escaped notice in the former edition, and the addition of many words and phrases therein omitted ; having consulted a very valu-

* Deuteronomy, xxxii. 29.

ble manuscript of the late learned Mr. Samuel Morland, in five volumes in folio, which furnished me with a large number of English and Latin phrases not to be found before in any dictionary, I have inserted as many of them, as was consistent with the brevity and expedition required in this edition. And what has before been generally neglected in works of this nature, but I hope will be of service to the more curious, the very words of the several authors, with particular references to the passages cited in more difficult descriptions of places and things, are here introduced; a few instances of which the reader may observe under the following words:

to ask the price,	intent,	a party, or faction,	to remember,
a garret,	a law,	to pay,	safe,
a garter,	natural,	to perpetuate,	to scruple, or make a scruple of,
to get aside,	to offer one's service,	plentifulness, or plenty,	to shew,
to get, or spread abroad,	to offer battle,	a plot, or design,	short,
to get gain,	an office, or public charge,	to gain, or carry one's point,	the sight, to have a business in hand,	to manage an office,	to poll more men,	to signify,
the heart,	an opinion,	power,	slippery,
to keep open house,	opportunity,	quarter,	the soul,
ill at ease, or sick,	to be in pain, or be pained,	a quota,	a stranger, to insinuate one's self into another's favour,	pardon,	to redress grievances,	a year.
	a person of good parts,

And what was observed to be of considerable consequence, care has been generally taken to subjoin no Latin words to the preceding English, but what may be found in the Latin part: a neglect of which, in all the dictionaries of this sort hitherto published among us, has been of very ill consequence to young persons in their choice of words, and forming a Latin stile; for which reason it was thought requisite, that the Latin part should be first printed.

And, because some have thought, that too few etymologies were before inserted, I have added several new ones, taken chiefly from Mr. Samuel Morland, whose sagacity in that respect was very remarkable.

Many critical observations on particular words will likewise be found, in the manner of Faber, Doletus, Stephanus, and other writers of that sort; as in abutor,	aedes,	animal,	cognatio,	decernere,	eloquor, accido,	aeque ut quam,	appareo,	collegium,	decertare,	enallage,

adcredo,	affectator,	arceo,	comitatus,	defessus,	enitor,
addere,	affulgeo,	assentatio,	commercium,	diphthongus,	exsto,
adducere,	aliquando,	attineo,	commilitium,	disitus,	facilis,
adjuto,	aliquis,	attonitus,	consto,	distingo,	fortis,
admonitus,	aliter,	barba,	contingo,	dolus,	frater,
adolescens,	ambitus,	bilis,	convenio,	duro,	frequens,
adsciscere,	ampliatio,	bonus,	corrumpo,	eclipsis,	frugis,
adversus,	amputo,	civis,	crimen,	edicere,	futo;

with many more, through the whole alphabet, too numerous to be recited here; and therefore these are to be considered as given only by way of specimen.

I have added also several examples from authors before omitted, as the reader may see under absonus,	allatro,	antiquo,	asfolet,	caementum,	causarius, accipus,	alluvies,	appeto,	audientia,	cataraeta,	conscisco, &c.

Likewise several illustrations of difficult places from the best commentators now extant may be found through the work.

Besides these things, I have carefully examined many suspected words, usually denoted in the former edition by Lit. ex Plaut. Liv. etc. for many of which good authorities are now cited, which have since occurred; and others, supposed to be good, upon examination appeared not to be so, which are distinguished with their proper marks.

Besides the many advantages hitherto mentioned in this part of the work, the reader will also find several hundred words, and additional senses of others, with many critical remarks all taken from classic writers, and not to be met with in other Latin dictionaries; which were communicated for the improvement of this edition by Mr. Professor Ward of Gresham College.

III. In the Latin proper part, besides correcting some mistakes, which escaped in the former edition, citations are given out of the Roman poets, chiefly to denote the quantity, where it was dubious; which has been too much neglected in most books of this kind.

I HAVE further to add, that some editions of the Latin classics having been either published since the former edition of this dictionary, or at least come to my hand since that time, I have diligently perused them also; amongst which are,

Auctores Rei rusticae,	Gesneri,	Manilius,	Bentleii,
Ausonius,	Delphini,	Ovidius,	Burmanni,
Celsus,	J. B. Morgani,	Plinii Ep.	Cortii,
Livius,	Crevier,	Quintilianus,	Capperonmerii,
Lucanus,	Oudendorpii,	Terentius,	Westerhovii.

As this edition is printed upon a larger type, and in a more distinct manner than the former; it is to be hoped, that these advantages, besides the improvements above mentioned, will serve to recommend it to the favour of the public.

MR. Ainsworth, in his English preface to this work, has given so full an account, both of the reasons which prevailed with him, and the great labour which it cost him, to compile a new Latin dictionary; that nothing further seems necessary to be said here upon that subject. And it was no small satisfaction to him to find the good success of so many years pains, and close study; though Dr. Littleton's dictionary, which had received great improvements, was then in high esteem. But it had doubtless been a great ease to himself, as well as benefit to the public, had he undertaken that useful and laborious task, before he was so far advanced in years; that he might have lived to put the last hand to it himself, and left it in such a state, as to render the endeavours of any, who should come after him, less necessary in order to complete it.

BUT notwithstanding the disadvantages, that both the author and the work itself suffered on that account, his performance, which was first published in the year MDCCLXXXVI, was so well received by the learned and judicious part of the nation; that the proprietors were encouraged to print a second edition of it in MDCCXLVI, both on a larger paper and in a larger character, with many emendations, additions, and other improvements. For as Mr. Ainsworth lived several years after the publication of the first edition, he continued, as his great age and infirm state of health would permit, either to correct such mistakes, or supply such deficiencies, as occurred to him, by a constant review of it. And he having at his death recommended it to the care of Dr. Samuel Patrick, by whom it was afterwards republished, it received no small improvements from his additional labours.

HOWEVER, as the doctor declined greatly in his health long before the publication, and died soon afterwards; the proprietors were informed by several very good judges, that notwithstanding all the care and attention employed by him in the execution of the work, many errors, either from the copy, or the press, had crept into that edition; and besides, that the book itself was still capable of being made more useful by greater improvements. These reasons therefore made them desirous to present the public with a more complete and perfect edition, than either of the former. And as I had for many years made this part of literature the entertainment of my leisure hours, they were pleased to apply themselves to me; as well to revise, correct, or supply any defects of the work itself; as carefully to inspect it at the press. But as such an edition could not be prepared under a considerable length of time; and likewise the call for this dictionary soon after became very great, especially from the schools; the proprietors found themselves obliged to comply with that demand, by publishing it again in its former state and size. For as it was generally esteemed by far the best dictionary of any yet extant for the use of schools, an edition in a larger size, as was then proposed, would not have answered that end.

I SHALL now proceed to give some account of this present edition; for the improvement of which Dr. Ward of Gresham College has been so kind as to contribute the like assistance, as to the former editions.

This edition consists of two volumes, in the disposition whereof, in order to render them more commodious and equal in size, the first contains the English words before the Latin, the proper names of persons and places, and several appendages relating to the Roman antiquities, with other useful subjects.

In the former part of this volume, which contains the English before the Latin, recourse was constantly had to the best English dictionaries, and proper Latin words have been subjoined to all the additions made from thence. In the choice whereof care has constantly been taken to give no other, but such as may be found in the Latin part, with the same distinctions, as to their authority, as had been observed in the former editions.

In regard to the latter part of this volume, many corrections have been made, especially in the poetical stories; and some additions, more particularly in the names of places.

THE remaining articles continue much the same, as in the last edition.

THE second volume contains the Latin before the English, in which the following improvements have been made. The derivations of many words, which the Latin writers borrowed from the Greek language, are here inserted. Several classical words, not to be met with in other Latin dictionaries, have likewise been added. Many sentences, which were before imperfectly cited, are here given more at large from their respective authors, to render them intelligible. References are made to the particular places of many quotations, which were before cited only by the name of the author, and more especially those from Cicero and Livy. The references to Pliny's Natural History are made by the sections of Harduin's editions, and not as before by the chapters.

LASTLY, the utmost care has been taken, through the whole, to render this edition as free from typographical errors, as was possible in a work of this nature.

WILLIAM YOUNG.

Different Ages relating to the PURITY of the

LATIN TONGUE.

THOUGH the origin, growth, flourishing state, and decay of the Latin tongue may, in my opinion, be most properly represented by the different ages of man, as infancy, youth, manhood, and old age: yet, since those periods of time have been more usually distinguished by metals of greater or less fineness, as gold, silver, brass, and iron; I choose to keep to the method of digesting them prescribed by others, rather than seem too fond of my own opinion, by introducing a new way of my own.

THE golden age in this case is generally computed from the time of the second Punic war, to the latter end of the reign of Augustus Caesar, and comprehendeth the oldest authors in the Latin tongue now extant, excepting the fragments of Livius Andronicus. Though for a considerable time after the commencement of this period, the language was but yet forming, and by gradual improvements afterwards arrived to its state of perfection under Augustus.

THE silver age is reckoned to have commenced on the death of Augustus, and continued to the end of Trajan's reign.

THE brass age began at the death of Trajan, and lasted till the time that Rome was taken by the Goths, about four hundred and ten years after the birth of Christ.

THE iron age commenced from the sacking of Rome before mentioned, after which the purity of the Latin tongue was very much neglected, and multitudes of barbarous words and forms of expression introduced, to the great disparagement of that noble language.

How rude and unpolished this tongue was in its infant state, appeareth from hence, that the hymns of the Salar priests instituted by Numa, were scarcely understood by the priests themselves, who were cotemporary with the flourishing times, as Fabius telleth us, Inst. Orat. 1, 6. And the decemviral, and pontifical laws had nothing of that beautiful diction, which may be observed in the writings of the Augustan age.

Ennius the poet is also described by Ovid. Trist. 2, 424, as ingenio maximus, arte rudis. And Caecilius is said by Tully ad Att. 7, 3, to be malus Latinitatis auctor.

BUT in after-times the Romans took great pains in polishing their native language, and even Caesar himself, when otherwise engaged in business of great moment, writ a book relating to the speaking of Latin accurately, and declareth therein, verborum delectum originem esse eloquentiae, Cic. de Clar. Orat. 72. Caesar, Cicero the father of the Roman eloquence, Cornelius Nepos, Varro, Sallust, and Livy, may justly be reckoned the greatest writers in prose, and Plautus, Terence, Lucretius, Virgil, Horace, and Ovid, the greatest poets; who all lived in the golden age.

Celsus, Paterculus, Columella, Curtius, Tacitus, Pliny the historian, Suetonius, and some other prose writers, flourished in the silver age; and Persius, Lucan, Silius Italicus, Valerius Flaccus, Juvenal, and Martial among the poets; and the two Seneca's distinguished themselves by their writings on moral and other subjects.

Justin; Aelius Spartianus, with the other writers of the Augustan history; Eutropius, Vegetius, Macrobius, and Aurelius Victor, writers in prose; Nemesianus, Ausonius, Prudentius, and Claudian, poets, lived in the brass age, and were a considerable ornament to it.

THOUGH it is usual to judge of the diction of the Roman writers by the age they lived in; yet that this may admit of some exceptions is evident from hence, that Vitruvius, who writ even in the Augustan age, sinketh in some places far below the diction of his cotemporaries; and the style of Valerius Maximus, the writers of the Historiae Augustae, Ammianus Marcellinus, and Apuleius, is much worse than of some others who lived in their times; and yet several lawyers, as Aemilius, Papinian, Ulpian, and others, writ in a good Latin style under Alexander Severus; and even Lactantius, a Christian, writ good Latin in the reign of Constantine. Sulpitius Severus, and Claudian the poet, in the time of Honorius; yea and long after, under Theodoric the Goth, Boetius, a man of consular dignity, wrote in so pure a Roman style, that if we were ignorant of the age he lived in, we should take him for a cotemporary of Cicero.

In after-times the beauty of the Latin tongue declined very much, and many base words were introduced into the language, especially by the ecclesiastic and physical writers, the use of which ought to be carefully avoided by all persons studious of writing in a good Latin style. The surest way of obtaining which, is carefully to read, make observations upon, and imitate the purest Latin writers, especially those who come the nearest to Cicero, to whose valuable writings this language is very much indebted.

An Explication of the several MARKS used in this W O R K.

In the first, or English and Latin part :

TH E Declensions of Noun Substantives are denoted only by the figures 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, except in such as may occasion any difficulty to young scholars as to the Gender, or Genitive case singular; in which words both the Gender and Genitive case are set down.

The Conjugations of Verbs are denoted in the same manner, with like restriction.

In the second and third parts :

The different English significations of the Latin words are denoted by figures, as well as the Latin authorities.

The figures after an author's name, where there are only two figures, denote the book, chapter, or verse, and where three, the third denoteth the section, or subdivision.

In all the parts :

- † Prefixed to a word denoteth it to be obsolete.
- || Before a word denoteth it to be bad, or used only by writers of an inferior class.
- * Before a word sheweth it to be of Greek extraction.
- ¶ Is prefixed to phrases and idioms.
- § Denoteth the grammatical construction.
- ♣ Before a word sheweth it to be poetical.
- ‡ Is put before good Latin words substituted in the room of Greek, or bad Latin words.
- = Prefixed to a word, or sentence, sheweth that the words, or two words in that sentence, are much of the same import.
- ⌘ Before a word, or sentence, sheweth that the words, or two words in that sentence, are used in an opposite, or different sense.
- =⌘ Denote that there are words both of the same and opposite sense in the same sentence.
- ☞ Denoteth something remarkable as to the use and construction of a word.
- ˉ Over a Vowel sheweth that syllable to be long.
- ˘ Over a vowel denoteth that syllable to be short.
- Rar. occ. for raro occurrit; vix alibi, or nescio an alibi; denote that the word is seldom to be met with.
- f. q. for sed quaere; expressing a doubt.
- q. v. for quod vide, or see the word referred to.

LINGUAE LATINAE

COMPENDIARIII

ABI

A or an, An indefinite particle, denoting almost the same as one, is generally expressed in Latin only by putting the Noun in the singular number, as a dog, canis; unless after Nouns of number, as many a man, multi; the word homines being understood, though more usually omitted, as sufficiently denoted by the masculine gender of the Adjective. In English this particle is commonly placed before the Adjective, as a stout man, fortis.

A clock, for of, or by the clock, Hora prima, secunda, & sic de caeteris.

Any, Ullus, quilibet, quisquam, quivis. ¶ Nor could any wind blow, but, neque ullus afflare ventus poterat, quin. Any never so small a matter, quaelibet vel minima res. Any one of you, quivis vestrum. Scarce any hath escaped the like death, haud ferè quicquam talem interitum effugit. If there be any question about any thing, si de re quapiam quaeratur. But if there be any necessity for this, sin quae necessitas hujus obvenerit. I use him the most of any, hoc ego utro uno omnium plurimum. Whilst there was any treaty of peace, quoad de pace ageretur. He took as much pains as any of you, aequè ut quivis vestrum laboravit. If you provoke me any more, praeter haec si me irritas. In any thing rather than this, ubivis facilius quam in hac re. If they had any mind, si in animo esset. He that is any thing slack in revenge, qui in ulciscendo remissior fuerit. Contented with any prince, qualicunque principe contentus. I understand not any one word, verbum prorsus nullum intelligo. He cometh not behind any for grandeur, nemini cedit splendore. The tempest will not suffer them to go any farther, tempestas prodire longius non patitur. There was never any doubt of it, de eo nunquam omnino dubitatum est. She is said to have respected this above any other country, fertur terris magis omnibus hanc coluisse.

Any, Ecquis, ecquisnam. ¶ Ho, is any body here? heus, ecquis hic est? whereas you ask whether there be any hope, quod quaeris ecqua spes sit.

Any thing, Quicquam vel quidquam, quidpiam, quippiam, quodvis. ¶ Any thing pleaseth me, mihi quidvis sat est. If he offend any thing, si quid peccat. Was he any thing the richer? nunquid copiosior fuit? Rather to suffer any thing, quidvis pati malle. If the blast hath done any hurt, si uredo quippiam nocuit. They denied that they had any further commands, negabant sibi ultra quicquam mandatum esse. I have not said any thing falsely, nihil quidquam mentitus sum. He looketh not after any thing to find fault withal, non requirit quid reprehendat. If it be any thing hot, si modo aer paulo calidior fuerit. Is he any thing the richer for it? an propterea ditior evasit? Any thing of a gentleman would scorn to do it, aliquis paulo humaniore indole id agere nollet. I am as sick as any thing, gravissimè aegroto.

Any further, Ulterius, amplius.

Any how, Quoquomodo.

Any longer, Diutius.

Any man, any body, or any one, Quispiam, quivis, quivis unus. Is any man alive more fortunate than I? Ecquis me vivit hodiè fortunatior? If any one ask for me, si quis me quaerat.

If he had any mind, Si in animo esset.

Any more, Amplius.

Any where, Usquam, alicubi, ubivis, ubilibet, uspiam. It were better to live any where, praestantius fuerit ubivis gentium aetatem agere. Whether there be any law written any where, or no, sin est ulla lex scripta uspiam, live nusquam. I do not believe I shall have any where any settled being, habitaturum me nusquam arbitror. I wish he were any where here about, utinam hic esset alicubi. If you are any where out of the way, si uspiam absis.

If any where, Sicundè.

If at any time, Siquando.

Any whither, Quoquam, usquam, quopiam. ¶ Are you going any whither? ituruse ne quopiam es? Nor indeed did I go any whither after that day, nec verò usquam discedebam ex eo die.

Any while, Aliquandiu.

At any time, Unquam, quodocunque.

As [implying time of action] Dum, ut, cum, in, ubi, super, inter, &c. *As I stood at the door, dum ante ostium sto. As the money was paying down, the man happened to come in on a sudden, ut numerabatur fortè argentum, intervenit homo de improvviso. As I was folding up this letter, cum complicarem hanc epistolam. As I was going into the nursery, ubi in gynæceum ire occipio. He studieth as he is travelling, in itinere secum ipse meditatur. Had this befallen you as you were at supper, si inter coenam hoc tibi accidisset. These things did he talk as we were at supper, hæc ille dixit super coenam. * And as he flew he looked down upon the fields, agrosque volans despectabat.*
As [in comparisons, and answering to such, so, &c.] is made by Qui or qualis. Nor are we such as enemies cannot defame, neque ii sumus, quos vituperare ne inimici quidem possint. Shew yourself now to be such a one, as you have already shewn yourself before, praebe te talem hoc tempore, qualem te jam antea prae-buisti.
As, in one part of a sentence answering to so in the other, is made by Atque, quemadmodum, quomodo, sicut, ita, velut, ut. So [or such] shall be the end of felicity as it was before, similis erit finis boni, atque antea fuerat. If this be so full as I say, si plenum sit hoc quemadmodum dico. You have so made me consul as few have been made in this city, ita me fecistis consulem, quomodo pauci in hac civitate facti sunt. As you said, so it fell out, sicut dixi, ita evenit. From which judgment he escaped naked as from a fire, quo ex judicio velut ex incendio nudus effugit. As that was troublesome, so this is pleasant, ut illud erat molestum, sic hoc est jucundum. Would he be so foolish as to trust me? an ille tam esset stultus ut mihi crederet?
As, in the latter clause of a sentence answering to so, or as great, much, little, soon, fast, &c. is made by Quam, quantus, qui, or ut, with a superlative; as, Let the business be dispatched as soon, and with as little trouble as may be, quam primum & quam minima cum molestia res transigatur. As great honour as might be was given to the gods, diis, quantus maximus poterat, habitus est honos. I ran away as fast as I could, ego me in pedes quantum quoque conjeci. I commended you to him as diligently as I could, sic ei te commenda-vi, ut gravissimè, diligentissimèque potui. I shew you as much respect as can be, quâ possum veneratione maximâ te prosequor. He accosteth the man as courteously as possible, appellat hominem quàm blandissimè potest. I have set forth the oracles as briefly as I could, exposui quam brevissimè potui oracula.
As, redoubled with an adverb or adjective betwixt, and the particles, it is, they be, &c. after it, is made by Quamlibet or quamvis. As rich as you are, he careth not a pin for you, non enim pili facit te quamlibet divitem. As if it were any hard matter for me to name them, as many as they are, quasi vero mihi difficile sit, quamvis multa nominatim proferre. Sometimes

Sometimes it is put for homo for, and is made by Quantuscunque or quantuluscunque. All this, as great as it is, is thine, totum hoc, quantumcunque est, tuum est. By this which I say, as little as it is, may be judged, ex eo quod dico, quantulum id cunque est, judicari potest. As wise a man as any in our city, sapiens homo cum primis nostrae civitatis.

As is sometimes put for in this regard, or respect, and then is made by Ut, qua, or tanquam. I will pursue him to the death, not as a just enemy, but as a poisonous murderer, ad internecionem mihi persequendus est, non ut justus hostis, sed ut percussor veneficus. He is not valued as he is any man's son, but as he is a man, non quā filius alicujus, sed quā homo aestimatur. And commanded to speak not as a senator, but as a person accused, jussumque dicere non tanquam senatorem, sed tanquam reum.

As, answering to so or as, where equality is intimated, or comparison of one thing with another, is made by Aequē ac, aequē atque, aequē quam; tam, quam; non, haud, or nihilo minus, quam. What mighty advantage would there be in prosperity, without a man had some body to rejoice at it as much as himself? Quis esset tantus fructus in prosperis rebus, nisi haberes qui illis, aequē ac tu ipse, gauderet? These benefits are not to be accounted so great, as those, which, haec beneficia aequē magna non sunt habenda, atque ea, quae. They can see as well by night as by day, noctibus aequē quam die cernunt. He is afraid of harm as much as any of you, non minus quam vestrum quivis formidat malum. I thought he made as great account of her as of himself, quam ego intellexi haud minus quam seipsum magni facere. He is in as great misery, as he that, nihilo minus in miseria est quā ille qui. I loved you as my own brother, te in germani fratris dilexi loco. They are as very fools, pari stultitiā sunt.

As, signifying accordingly, or proportionably as, is made by Ut, uti, sicut, ita ut, pro, prout, pro eo ac, pro eo atque, perinde atque, proinde, proinde ac, utcunque, &c. As you deserve, ut meruisti. As you say, uti dicis. I fled to his house as to an altar, sicut in aram confugi in hujus domum. I loved him as my own, amavi pro meo. As every one pleaseth, prout cuique libido est. As I ought, pro eo ut debui. It must be accounted of as done by no right, pro eo habendum est atque si nullo jure factum esset. As I shall tell you, perinde ut dicam. He did not seem to apprehend it, as I had thought, non perinde atque ego putāram, arripere visus est. He is not hated as he deserveth, quem nequam, perinde ac dignus est, oderunt homines. As occasion shall be, pro re nata. As there shall be need of speaking, utcunque opus fuerit verbis.

As [which or which thing] Quod, id quod. She did as her mother bid her, Mater quod suavit sua fecit. But if our country do affect us, as it should very much, at si nos, id quod maxime debet, nostra patria dilexit.

As is sometimes used for if. As you love me, Si me ames. As I live, si vivo.

As sure as can be, Quām certissimē.

As for, or as to, De, quatenus, quantum, quod ad, ad. As to the keeping our liberty I agree with you, de libertate retinenda tibi assentior. As for what he spake of religion, quatenus de religione dicebat. As far as I could apprehend, quantum assequi potui. As for Pomponius, quod ad Pomponium. I will do that which, as to the severity of it, shall be more mild, and, as to the common safety, more profitable, faciam id, quod est ad severitatem lenius, ad communem salutem utilius.

As being, Ut, utpote, quippe, scilicet. As being one to whom very great sorrow came by his death, ut qui summum moerorem ex ejus morte percepturus esset. A people that may be numbred as being small, populus numerabilis, utpote parvus. Democritus, as being a learned man, thinketh the sun to be of a great compass, sol Democrito magnus videtur, quippe homini erudito. I, as being a very wise man, presently understood, ego, scilicet homo prudentissimus, statim intellexi.

As far as, Qua, quantum, quoad, usque, usque ad, usque eo. As far as one could see, qua visus erat. As far as is in my power, quantum situm est in nobis. As far as possible, quoad ejus fieri potest. As far as Rome, Romam usque. As far as the works, usque ad molem. As far as shall be needful, usque eo quo opus erit.

As if, as though, Quasi, perinde quasi, perinde ac si, tanquam, ut si, tanquam qui, tanquam si, non secus ac si, juxta ac si, ita ut si. As if his life lay at stake, quasi vitae discrimen agatur. You require that we should confirm that as though it were done by our order, postulas ut id, perinde quasi factum sit nostro judicio, confirmemus. They trembled, as if they had been surprized by an ambush, perinde, ac si insidiis circumventi fuissent, trepidarunt. She fought as if she had no mind to conquer, ita pugnabat tanquam quae vincere nollet. That they should salute him as though he were a consul, ut istum, tanquam si esset consul, salutarent. This is all one as if I should say, hoc perinde est tanquam si ego dicam. As if you were my own brother, non secus ac si frater meus esses. As if he had been my own brother, juxta ac si meus frater esset. As though he had known nothing of the matter, ita ut si rem istam non nossent. He maketh as though he had not been willing, dissimulat se voluisse.

As it were, Ut, ceu, quasi, tanquam.

As long as, Quamdiu, tamdiu, tantisper dum, quoad, usque dum, dum. You shall learn as long as you will, discas quamdiu voles. He lived in the city as long as he could conveniently, vixit tamdiu quam licuit in civitate beatè vivere. As long as you oblige him, dum huic obsequare. I must play least in sight as long as the matter is undecided, latendum est tantisper dum negotium non confectum fuerit. Do not forbear writing to me, as long as you can conveniently do it, quoad ejus facere poteris, ne intermittas scribere ad me. As long as they live, usque dum vivunt. I gave as long as I had it, dedi dum fuit.

As big as, as bad as, Instar. As big as a book, instar voluminis. They think it as bad as death, instar mortis putant.

As many as, Tot totidem, quotquot, quodcunque, quotcunque. As many years as he has lived, tot annos quot habet. There are as many changes of voices as of minds, vocis mutationes totidem sunt quot animorum. As many as there be, quotquot erunt. As many soldiers as you can get together, quodcunque militum contrahere poteritis. ¶ Twice as many as the number of servants requireth, duplicia quam numerus servorum exigit.

As much, Tantum. Though I lose as much more, etiamsi alterum tantum perdendum sit. ¶ Who ought to have enjoyed these things as much or more, quem pariter uti his decuit, aut etiam amplius. ¶ Add as much as you will thereto, it will keep to its kind, quantumcunque eo addideris, in suo genere manebit. ¶ They are as much to blame, simili sunt in culpa, tam sunt in vitio. ¶ As much as lay in me, quod quidem in me fuit. ¶ We have done as much as we promised and undertook, satisfactum est promisso nostro ac accepto. ¶ I will do as much for you, reddam vicem, reddetur opera. ¶ Which is as much as any plaintiff can desire, quod est accusatori maxime optandum. ¶ He made as much account of the good will of his own townsmen, as of his own credit, voluntatem municipum tantidem, quanti fidem suam fecit.

As much as ever, Ut cum maxime, quantus maxime. The house is as much celebrated as ever, domus celebratur ita ut cum maxime. I will speak with as much brevity as ever I can, dicam quantā maxime brevitate potero.

As often as, Quotiescunque, toties quoties. As often as I speak, quotiescunque dico. As often as it is commanded, toties quoties praecipitur.

As soon as, Ubi, cum, cum primum, ut, simul ac, simul ut, atque.

As soon as ever, Ubi primum, ut primum, cum primum, simul ac primum, statim ut.

As well as, ut, tam quam, aequē ac. I will bear it as well as I can, ut potero feram. I love thee as well as myself, tam te diligo quam meipsum. If they could endure our vices as well as our commands, si tam vitia nostra quā imperia ferre potuissent. As well as I, aequē mecum, juxta mecum, mecum pariter. They can see as well by night as by day, noctibus aequē quā die cernunt. ¶ He thinketh no body can do as well as himself, nihil nisi quod ipse facit rectum putat.

Before is variously rendred in Latin, sometimes, and most commonly, by Ante, as, Nor did I ever set eyes upon this woman before to day, neque ego hanc oculis vidi ante hunc diem. Lay it before our door, ante januam nostram appone. Before your very feet, my lords, ante pedes vestros, judices. Whom I love before myself, quem ante me diligo. He died the year before I was censor, anno ante me censorem mortuus est.
Note, Ante, in this sense, is sometimes used absolutely without a case; as, A long time before, multo ante. I thought of it four days before, id ipsum quatrduo ante cogitaram.
Apud, as, Before the court, apud curiam.
Coram, as, The cause was pleaded before the senate, coram senatu res acta est. I spake with you before P. Cuspius, coram P. Cuspio tecum locutus sum. I am afraid of commending you any more before your face, vereor coram in os te laudare amplius.
In, as, Before the face of all men, in omnium oculis.
Ob, as, Death was often before my eyes, ob oculos mihi saepe mors versata est. Banishment was before mine eyes, mihi exilium ob oculos versabatur.
Palam, as, I commended these things before you, haec te palam laudaveram.
Prae, as, Before the door, prae foribus. Do you go before, I will follow, I prae, sequar.
Praeter, as, Before their own mens faces, praeter suorum ora. They were all carried before Lollius, praeter oculos Lollii omnia ferebantur.
Prior, prius, as, We will go before, nos priores ibimus. I wrote to you before, prius ad te scripsi.
Pro, as, Before the camp, pro castris. Before Castor's Temple, pro aede Castoris.
Sub, as, Before their eyes, sub oculis. The matter is yet before the judge, adhuc sub iudice lis est. Before the gates, sub ipsos postes.
Supra, as, Which I wrote of before, quae supra scripsi.
Before [before that] Ante, antequam, citius, priusquam, potius; as, Which cause was dead before you were born, quae causa ante ante mortua est quàm tu natus esses. Before I depart this life, antequam ex hac vita migro. I shall want voice before I want names, vox me citius deficiet quàm nomina. Before you began to speak, priusquam loqui coepisti. I would run quite away before I would come back, aufugerem potius quàm redeam. ¶ Before the year was gone about, non toto vertente anno. Before a man can tell what's that, dicto citius. Before I had done complaining, in cometh she, nondum querelam finieram, quum illa intervenit.

A little before, Paulo antè.

Long before, Multo antè.

For [a conjunction] Nam, enim, etenim, quippe. For if any [mischief be in this matter, nam si hīc mali est quicquam. For first by them was the horse routed, ab his enim primum equitatus est pulsus. For who is so quick a writer as I? etenim quis est tam in scribendo impiger, quā ego? For in those days it was said, quippe in his ipsis temporibus dicebatur.

For [being a preposition] is answered by several Latin prepositions; scil.

A; as, Consider whether this be not all for me, Vide ne hoc totum sit a me. For me she is a maid, a me pudica vel virgo est.

Ad; as, For a while, Ad quoddam tempus. For no intreaties, ad nullas preces. For what concerned the truce, quod ad inducias pertineret.

De; as, As for other matters, De caeteris rebus. To lose his life for the king, de rege sanguinem fundere. It is not for nothing, that—non hoc de nihilo est, quod—He did it for the nonce, de industriā fecit. To translate word for word, verbum de verbo expressum proferre.

Ex; as, If it were for our profit, Si ex usu esset nostro. She died for sorrow, mors consecuta est ex aegritudine. He is fallen sick for grief, in morbum ex aegritudine conjicitur.

In; as, They are bad for a double service, habentur in duplex ministerium. For the remaining time, in reliquum tempus. Leading a few prisoners for a shew, ducens paucos in speciem captivos. For ever, in omne tempus. For a perpetual remembrance, in memoriam sempiternam. For to come, in posterum.

Ob;

Ob; as, The gods punish for the crime, ob delictum dii poenas expetunt. Laid to pawn for ten pounds, ob decem minas oppo-situs pignori. I am paid for my folly, pretium ob stultitiam fero.

Per; as, They have law for it, Iis id ipsum per legem licebat. For so many ages, tot per secula. Nor indeed could she for age, neque per aetatem etiam poterat. You may for me, per me licet.

Prae; as, I could not jest for concern of mind, nec jocari prae curâ poteram. I cannot speak for weeping, prae lacrymis loqui non possum.

For anger, Prae irâ.

For fear, Prae metu.

For joy, Prae gaudio.

Pro; as, I shall be punished for his faults, Pro hujus ego pec-catis supplicium sufferam. Boys are angry with one another for very small faults, pueri inter se pro quâ levissimis noxiis iras gerunt. I will grind for you, ego pro te molam.

For [considering] our estate, Pro re nostrâ.

To take for granted, Pro concessio sumere.

To hold for done, Pro facto habere.

To believe for true, Pro certo credere.

Propter; as, He obeyeth the laws for fear, Legibus propter metum paret. For ignorance of the matters themselves, propter ignorantiam rerum ipsarum.

Secundum; as, He spake much for our side, Multum secundum causam nostram disputavit.

Note, the Preposition is sometimes to be understood; as, For fear of being yielded up, Metu deditiois. He dieth for love, amore deperit. He bargained with you for three pounds a foot, ternis minis tecum in pedem transegit. For the nonce, deditâ operâ. Ransom your self for as little as you can, te redime cap-tum quâ queas minimo.

For how much? Quanti?

For so much, Tanti.

For more, Pluris.

For less, Minoris.

For how much soever, Quanticunque.

For after good, fit, lawful, profitable, &c. is most commonly the sign of the dative case; as, I would, but for hurting him, Vellem, ni foret ei damno. It is a shame for them that are bred well to live basely, turpe est eis qui bene nati sunt, turpiter vi-vere.

For [for the sake of] Causâ, ergo, gratiâ, per, pro, propter;
 as, As for example, Exempli causâ vel gratiâ. For fear and fight, fugae & formidinis ergo. For this reason I made a shew of it to try you, eâ gratiâ simulavi, vos ut pertentarem. I intreat you for the sake of God, and our friendship, per ego te Deos oro, & nostram amicitiam. He did not refuse to venture any hazard for my sake, nullum periculum pro me adire dubitavit. Virtue is to be desired for its own sake, virtus propter se expetenda est.

For all [although] Etsi, quanquam, etiamsi, quamvis; as, I can hardly yield you this for all you are his father, haud tibi hoc concedo, etsi illi pater es.

For all this, or for all that, Nihilo minus, nihilo secius, ta-men. But for all that I will do it, nihilo minus ego hoc faciam tamen. For all that they will presently bring a child before the door, nihilo secius mox deferent puerum huc ante ostium. For all that proceed you in this match, tu tamen idem perge has nuptias facere.
For all that he could ever say or do, quantumcunque conatus est.

For [as for] Quod ad. For what concerned the truce, quod ad inducias pertineret. ¶ For what remaineth, quod superest.

For nothing, Gratis. He served him for nothing, gratis servi-vit illi. ¶ You shall not have abused us for nothing, haud impune in nos illuseris.

For that, or for as much, Cum, propterea quod, siquidem, quandoquidem, quoniam.

For the most part, Ferè, maximam partem, plerumque.

For some time, or while, Aliquando, aliquamdiu, aliquan-tisper. ¶ He will not be sensible of it for a while, hosce aliquot dies not sentiet. For some while he conversed with him, dies complures cum illo versatus est.

For what cause? Quare, quâ de causâ?

For which cause, Quamobrem, quare.

For that cause, Ideò, eò, propterea, eâ gratiâ, idcirco.

For ever, In aeternum. ¶ I am undone for ever, perpetuò perii.

For ever and ever, In secula seculorum.

Particular phrases. ¶ For all the philosophers say, quicquid di-cant philosophi. He was a good orator for those times, multum, ut temporibus illis, valuit dicendo. Very learned for a Roman, multae ut in Romano homine literae. I know for a certain, mihi est exploratissimum. For ought I see, quantum ego perspicio.
